M'CUMBER ASKS NEW LAWS FOR FARMERS' AID

Former Senator Declares
Remedy to Wheat Situation
Is Co-Operative
Marketing

MUST FIX THE PRICE

Increasing Cost of Labor,
Taxes, Transportation Held Underlying Causes

A gigantic and thoroughly organized co-operative marketing scheme, under which farmers can fix the price of their grain and regulate its production, is being proposed by Senator M'Cumber, who is the only means of permanently solving the problem of the cereal raiser.

In a letter to President Coolidge, Senator M'Cumber, who now is practicing law in Washington said:

"Is there any real practicable remedy—any cure that will be permanent? As this letter clearly demonstrates the only cure must be one that will increase the price of the farmer's product to an extent that will make its purchasing power equal to what it was before the war. It would require at least $2.50 per bushel for wheat on the farm to give the farmer after paying his taxes, the same comfort he had ten years ago; and it would require at $5.00 per bushel price to place him where he ought to be, on a plane of equality with the semi-skilled labor of our great cities. But we know that with two-thirds of the population clamoring for cheap food, there is little chance of placing him on such an equality."

"How can we increase the value of his product? There is but one way—combined with holding of his crop from the markets until he can receive his price. Now may this be done? It can be done only through an organization that will enable him to withhold from the market any surplus of his grain until he can get a living price for it. How can the Government assist him? It can provide by Federal law for a co-operative system of marketing of all of the farmer's products, a law that will be as comprehensive and complete as your law for the organization of regional banks and farm loan banks, etc."

Organization Is Key Note

"The world's business today is done through organization. Industrial organization dominates the production and marketing of all the products of our factories. Organized capital has been met by organized labor, each advancing its own interest. The unorganized farming industry, unable to fix the supply to meet the demand, unable to control the flow of what it has to sell into the markets of the country, suffers the consequences of this inherent weakness. The farmer must organize, and the only way the Government can assist him is to help him to organize and thereby help him to help himself. With such an organization provided for the farmer with credit and with protective power. With such an organization, its head could in twenty-four hours check the shipment of grain until a reasonable price demanded should be obtained."

Need Nation-wide Law

"But the farmers of the country with their varied industries are unable to consummate such an organization. What they need is some kind of a nation-wide law under which they can begin and consummate this organization. That nation-wide law should be a law providing for co-operative selling. But more cooperative selling will not alone meet the farmer's needs. He needs the power to cooperate in selling must be the power to cooperate in the joint holding of his products until he can get his price for them. He must meet force with force. He must meet combinations against his interest. He must be able to say to those whose earnings are $15.00 to $25.00 per day and whose added compensation increases the cost of everything he buys: You can not have a bushel of my wheat, a pound of my beef, a bale of my cotton until you are willing to pay me a sum that will allow me a competition that will allow my own until I can live and pay my debts and the interest on my mortgage."

"A law that would provide for an association beginning with the local farm organization in a state, with state agents or a committee to look after the particular interests of that state in marketing its grain, to bring the producers and consumer into as direct relation as possible, to create markets in the large cities where the farmer's product can be disposed of, and each of these states to be represented on a National Board would give the farmer the relief he is seeking. The plan should be similar to that of the regional banking system. The organization must have a head which from the flow immediately of all wheat and other cereals into a glutted market until that market

ELECTION CALL IS UNPOPULAR WITH ENGLISH

Prime Minister Baldwin As sailed to Placing Protective Tariff Vote Up

LIBERALS ARE ANGRY

London, Nov. 14.—(By the A. P.)

Probably the first question of a foreigner after reading today's editorial comment on the impending dissolution of parliament would be: "Why is this country having an election? Clearly nobody wants it." Disinclination to take a poll of the electorate on the protection question is manifested by all parties. The government supporters reluctantly agreed while their political opponents are disgusted and resentful. Some of the comments are victims and Prime Minister Baldwin is charged variously with unexampled levity, shady maneuvering, trickiness, and with having lapsed from the traditional honor and decency of British public life.

The Liberals, Laborites and Socialists are very angry. The Conservative newspapers, while in some cases scarcely disguising their disagreement with the premier's decision, say in effect "the die is cast. It cannot be helped now. So let's fight it out."

One of the outstanding features of the election will be the number of women's candidates. It is estimated that between 30 and 40 women will seek admission to the House of Commons. Lady Astor will again appeal to her electorate and it is understood Mrs. Wintringham will ask her own constituency to return her. It is less certain that the third woman member, Mrs. Phillips, will make a contest for her Berwick seat. She is likely to retire in favor of her husband, who she was chosen to succeed when he was unseated.

Knowledge in the financial district of London that a general election was imminent caused a loss of $2,000,000 of pound sterling in the London Exchange in two days.

WARM WELCOME FOR TEACHERS BEING PLANNED

Citizens Are Asked to Open
Gates of Hospitality When They Visit City

COMMITTEES WORKING

Housing Problem Is Put Up
To Citizens—Fine Entertainment Is Planned

Citizens of Bismarck will open the gates of hospitality when the North Dakota Education association convention brings between 1,000 and 2,000 teachers here on November 21, 22 and 23, under plans laid down by citizens committees, which held a joint meeting last night in the Association of Commerce rooms.

Two rare treats have been provided for the teachers, in addition to the fine program prepared by the officials of the association. The appearances of Ricardo Martin, tenor of the Metropolitan Opera Company, New York, and declared by many critics the rightful successor to Enrico Caruso, and Count Tolstoy, famous Russian lecturer, have been made possible through the Association of Commerce. Mr. Martin will appear two nights. On his first appearance, Nov. 23, a limited number of tickets will be sold, the number being limited to those who can be taken care of in excess of the number of attendees, who will be seated, standing, and on Saturday night the concert will be for the public.

Gala decorations are planned for the convention. The decoration of hotels, depots, schools, and streets will be under the direction of G. A. Hassell. A sub-committee of the A. of C., composed of E. B. Klein, Henry Halverson, William O'Hara, Christ Bertsch, Jr., and G. A. Hassell, will assist in the street lighting, housing, information and similar tasks.

It is planned to establish information booths for the visiting teachers to direct them to rooms, to points of interest and generally to aid the strangers in the city. Headquarters will be maintained at the A. of C. in charge of Mrs. R. A. Tey.

The housing question is a real problem. It is estimated that many rooms be listed for the teachers, since the number is expected to exceed the available number of rooms in hotels. It is made clear that the teachers will expect to pay hotel rates for the best rooms, and the citizens' committee desires that the best homes be thrown open to the teachers as a mark of Bismarck's hospitality.

Count Tolstoy, who lectures Nov. 22, is obtained by the local committee at great expense as a compliment to the teachers. However, it is expected 800 citizens may be able to hear him lecture, and tickets will be sold at $1 each.

Sings Two Nights

Ricardo Martin will sing on November 23 to the teachers and a few tickets will be sold to outsiders for the performance, and Saturday the entire house will be open. The charge fixed for the concert is $1.50, held by the citizens' committee to be unusually low in view of the reputation and achievements of Mr. Martin. An unusual call for tickets is expected.

A service corps is being organized under the direction of J. J. MacLeod, to consist of high school boys and Boy Scouts. The service corps will furnish information to teachers throughout the convention. One bus line, it was reported, has agreed to furnish transportation between the downtown district and the high school for 10 cents to teachers. Many departmental meetings will be held in the high school. Members of the Association of Commerce are asked to volunteer themselves to take the teachers 15 rooms selected for them. Members of the Thursday Musical club will furnish special numbers at the beginning of each day's program of the teachers.

Governor Nestos will introduce Count Tolstoy and Mr. Martin will be introduced by a director of the A. of C.

Modern Still Found in Ravine

Fargo, Nov. 13.—Federal prohibition agents and Williams county authorities discovered one of the largest and completest illicit distilleries ever found in North Dakota in the brakes of the Missouri river last Thursday.

The report of the discovery and the capture of two men in connection with it was announced at the federal prohibition headquarters here.

Deep in a ravine, in the wild and little traversed country in the southern part of the county, the officers found a frame building 25 by 50 feet. In it were, among other things, 70 gallons and one 50 gallon still, 35 gallons of grain and sugar mash, and 2,500 pounds of sugar.

OPENS HOSPITAL

Tuttle, Nov. 14.—Dr. W. W. Nutting of this city has leased the Evans property adjoining his residence and will convert it into a modern hospital in which to accommodate those in need of medical attention. The equipment has been ordered and when installed will be sanitary in every detail. Dr. Nutting states that the hospital will accommodate about six or eight patients.

Oklahoma City, Oct. 14.—(By the A. P.)—The Ku Klux Klan issue in the impeachment proceedings against Governor J. C. Walton moved to the fore today again as a "side issue" in the executive trial on charges of official misconduct. Taking occasion last night to deny the purported testimony of a former Klan official that he had subscribed to the oath and paid the initiation fee in the organization, the Governor said he was ready to present data on the matter when the time comes.

"I have the facts and circumstances in my possession to meet this issue when it is presented in the hearing," Governor Walton declared in asserting that "while strenuous efforts were made by Klansmen to have him join the organization, he did not subscribe to it, and nor did he pay the membership fee."

WALLACE FOR EXPORT SALES PLAN ON WHEAT

Says that U. S. Department of Agriculture Is Engaged in
Working Out Plan

POSTPONES LOSS

Loss on Wheat Sold Abroad
Charged to the Crop Next
Year, His Plan

Chicago, Nov. 14.—(By the A. P.)—An agricultural export commission designed to restore farm purchasing power by withdrawing exportable surpluses from domestic markets "is receiving the very careful consideration of the Department of Agriculture," Secretary Wallace said today in an address.

While the proposal "is not put forward as a policy of the administration," the Secretary said, it has the support and approval of many officials who are in a position to influence legislation on the program. The commission, it was explained, would buy exportable products at the American price and dispose of them in the world market, charging the loss to producers on the following crop.

"Such a commission as I suggest and which we are now outlining will look after the wheat surplus from behind a tariff wall so that prices paid to the domestic market at a point where a bushel of wheat will buy as much for the farmer as it did before the war," he said.

The secretary suggested that any effort to fix prices by governmental agencies would only add to the difficulties of the producers. In his view a readjustment of the situation will come only through a balancing of consumption and production and the readjustment would be interrupted by any governmental agency.

Chicago, Nov. 14.—(By the Associated Press)—A wheat commission plan of handling America's surplus wheat is now being worked out in his department, Henry C. Wallace, Secretary of Agriculture, indicated today in an address before the Chicago Association of Commerce.

Such a commission as he advocates would relieve the wheat farmer and in conjunction with the tariff would bring about a rise in the price of the domestic market.

He made it clear, however, that price fixing must be avoided, and warned that government interference with the elements of supply and demand would hamper readjustment.

ROBBERS RAID GOPHER BANK, MAKE ESCAPE

Loot in St. Leo Bank Is Yet
Unknown, According to
President of Institution

Marshall, Minn., Nov. 14.—After cutting all wire communications leading St. Leo here today robbers entered the Farmers and Merchants bank there and escaped after blowing the vault and scooping up all available cash and negotiable papers.

The robbers, however, failed to gain entrance into the strong box of the vault. Seven charges of nitroglycerine were used and as a result of the powerful charges the interior of the bank is practically wrecked.

Residents of the little village were awakened by the first crash about 2 a. m. and an hour later heard an automobile being rapidly driven out of town. The robbers gained entrance by breaking the front window in the bank building and then opening the door. Two chisels were left behind by the robbers when they made their getaway.

The President of the bank, Harry Tilden, resides at Minnesota, and he was notified by courier.

The amount of loot taken has not been determined by the officials of the institution and according to Mr. Tilden it will be sometime before an accurate statement as to the loss can be given.

ILLINOIS FARMERS ARE LOOKING FOR FARM HOMES IN NORTH DAKOTA

The state land department has been requested by Rev. H. Wolf of Des Plaines, Illinois, to have two townships of school land in the vicinity of New Salem, Morton county, appraised, stating that he has several Illinois farmers who are desirous of obtaining homes in that vicinity.

The advertising given the New Salem dairy circuit is understood to have made a deep impression on many renters of high-priced land in Illinois.

The land on which appraisals are asked is understood by Rev. Wolf not to be coal land. He would have appraised township 139, range 85, and township 140, range 84.

The letter will go before the board of university and school lands at its next meeting, scheduled for November 30, and it is expected that favorable action will be taken.

RESIGNATION IS ACCEPTED

The resignation of F. C. Himber, inspector of foods and beverages, who was arrested in Fargo on a liquor charge, presented to R. O. Baird, acting food commissioner, Fargo, was accepted by the state board of administration on Mr. Baird's recommendation.

COURT FIGHT ON GAS PRICE CUT PLANNED

Independent Oil Dealers in South Dakota Retain Lawyer to Fight McMaster

STATE SELLING GAS

Sioux Falls, S. D., Nov. 14.—Legal proceedings to prevent the sale of gasoline by the state will not be started before tomorrow, pending any action which Governor McMaster might take to stop the "war," which he started yesterday at Mitchell and at Yankton and at Sioux Falls today. A. C. Rhode, representing eight or nine independent dealers, and their attorney, George Danforth, said today.

Sioux Falls, S. D., Nov. 14.—A group of local independent gasoline and oil dealers last night announced that they had retained George D. Danforth as their attorney to aid them in the fight to prevent the state from selling gas.

In the face of the threat of legal action by the oil men, Governor McMaster placed gasoline on sale at the state penitentiary here today at 15 1/2 cents per gallon. The state depot at Mitchell sold gas at 15 cents yesterday at the Governor's order.

In Yankton gasoline is selling for 15 cents and other cities in the state are expected to have state gas for sale to the public at reduced rates.

Two routes are open to the independent to bring a respite. In the gas war or stop it altogether. Attorney Danforth said last night. One would be through an injunction filed in the lower courts to enjoin the Governor from authorizing the sale of gas by the state on the principle that he is exceeding his constitutional rights. The other would be through an original suit filed with the state supreme court. In this case a writ of prohibition would be sought to prevent the state from using funds of the state to purchase the gas and the machinery of the state for disposing of it.

Mr. Danforth said the latter plan seems the better plan in that action by the supreme court would settle the matter for all time while an injunction might extend it indefinitely.

The oil men who have retained Mr. Danforth will confer with him today and at that time will decide what plan they prefer to follow.

MUST SELL COOPERATIVELY

St. Paul, Nov. 14.—Only through organization and maintenance of co-operative gasoline selling stations will the motor vehicle owner find relief from excessive gasoline and oil prices in Minnesota under current conditions, declared John Holmberg, state commissioner of agriculture, in a report submitted to Governor J. A. O. Prouss.

The report deals with the investigation of the gasoline market made last August into the price stipulation of petroleum products at the request of Governor Prouss.

Commissioner Holmberg found that the ordinary gross retail margin is two cents a gallon on gasoline though a spread of 8 to 10 cents has sometimes existed.

He said dealers make a profit of 40 to 100 percent on oils and greases. The retail end of the business in Minnesota is "overdone" and there is too great an expense in the maintenance of a multiplicity of stations for which the public must pay, he said. Extravagant costs have been incurred in the purchase of station sites and erection of elaborate buildings, he said.

One-half of Minnesota's sales is made by the Standard Oil Company which through its control of the volume of business virtually sets the price.

Give Poincare
Confidence Vote

Paris, Nov. 13.—The French chamber of deputies today passed a vote of confidence in the Poincare government, 379 to 163.

The state of North Dakota, replying to the suit of the Truax Coal Company attacking the eight-hour day section of the mine inspection law, maintains that the law is valid and in accordance with recognized principles. The Truax Coal Company operates an open pit mine in the Northwestern part of the state and asserts that the digging of coal in this mine is not comparable to underground mines, and the eight-hour day therefore should not apply. It brought suit against the state mine inspectors. Attorney-General and states attorney at Burke county.

Attorney-General Shaffer, replying, declared that the eight-hour day was recognized as proper in the coal industry throughout the nation and that because men in open pit mines work in slush, mud and water in winter it is dangerous to their health.

He asks the suit pending in United States District Court, be dismissed.

Rogers, N. D., Nov. 14.—Arthur Grindler, 47, of Rogers, was almost instantly killed late Saturday afternoon when he was crushed beneath the wheels of a wagon loaded with corn stalks. The wheels of the wagon are said to have passed across the body causing rupture of the heart from which Mr. Grindler died soon after the accident.

KU KLUX RISES AS SPECTRE IN WALTON TRIAL

Governor Refutes Charges
That He Had Taken the Oath of a Klansman

WILL FACE ISSUE

Declares That He Is Ready to Present Data on Charge
When Times Comes

Oklahoma City, Oct. 14.—(By the A. P.)—The Ku Klux Klan issue in the impeachment proceedings against Governor J. C. Walton moved to the fore today again as a "side issue" in the executive's trial on charges of official misconduct. Taking occasion last night to deny the purported testimony of a former Klan official that he had subscribed to the oath and paid the initiation fee in the organization the Governor let it be known in a public statement that the matter probably would form an important part of his defense in the trial. At the same time he made public the names of 55 members of the lower house of the state legislature who, he said, had been represented to him as members of the Klan. The executive charged that the legislature conspired with the Ku Klux Klan to remove him from office.

"I have the facts and circumstances in my possession to meet this issue when it is presented in the hearing," Governor Walton declared in asserting that "while strenuous efforts were made by Klansmen to have him join the organization he did not subscribe to the oath nor did he pay the membership fee."

WALLACE FOR EXPORT SALES PLAN ON WHEAT

Says that U. S. Department of Agriculture Is Engaged in
Working Out Plan

POSTPONES LOSS

Loss on Wheat Sold Abroad
Charged to the Crop Next
Year, His Plan

Chicago, Nov. 14.—(By the A. P.)—An agricultural export commission designed to restore farm purchasing power by withdrawing exportable surpluses from domestic markets "is receiving the very careful consideration of the Department of Agriculture," Secretary Wallace said today in an address.

While the proposal "is not put forward as a policy of the administration," the Secretary said, it has the support and approval of many officials who are in a position to influence legislation on the program.

The commission, it was explained, would buy exportable products at the American price and dispose of them in the world market, charging the loss to producers on the following crop.

"Such a commission as I suggest and which we are now outlining will look after the wheat surplus from behind a tariff wall so that prices can rise in the domestic market to a point where a bushel of wheat will buy as much for the farmer as it did before the war," he said.

The secretary suggested that any effort to fix prices by governmental agencies would only add to the difficulties of the producers. In his view a readjustment of the situation will come only through a balancing of consumption and production and the readjustment would be interrupted by any governmental agency.

Chicago, Nov. 14.—(By the Associated Press)—A wheat commission plan of handling America's surplus wheat is now being worked out in his department, Henry C. Wallace, Secretary of Agriculture, indicated today in an address before the Chicago Association of Commerce.

Such a commission as he advocates would relieve the wheat farmer and in conjunction with the tariff would bring about a rise in the price of the domestic market.

He made it clear, however, that price fixing must be avoided and warned that government interference with the elements of supply and demand would hamper readjustment.

ROBBERS RAID GOPHER BANK, MAKE ESCAPE

Loot in St. Leo Bank Is Yet
Unknown, According to
President of Institution

Marshall, Minn., Nov. 14.—After cutting all wire communications leading to St. Leo here today robbers entered the Farmers and Merchants bank there and escaped after blowing the vault and scooping up all available cash and negotiable papers.

The robbers, however, failed to gain entrance into the strong box of the vault. Seven charges of nitroglycerine were used and as a result of the powerful charges the interior of the bank is practically wrecked.

Residents of the little village were awakened by the first crash about 2 a. m. and an hour later heard an automobile being rapidly driven out of town. The robbers gained entrance by breaking the front window in the bank building and then opening the door. Two chisels were left behind by the robbers when they made their getaway.

The president of the bank, Harry Tilleman, resides at Minnesota, and he was notified by courier.

The amount of loot taken has not been determined by the officials of the institution and according to Mr. Tilleman it will be some time before an accurate statement as to the loss can be given.

ILLINOIS FARMERS ARE LOOKING FOR FARM HOMES IN NORTH DAKOTA

The state land department has been requested by Rev. H. Wolf of Des Plaines, Illinois, to have two townships of school land in the vicinity of New Salem, Morton county, appraised, stating that he has several Illinois farmers who are desirous of obtaining homes in that vicinity.

The advertising given the New Salem dairy circuit is understood to have made a deep impression on many renters of high-priced land in Illinois.

The land on which appraisals are asked is understood by Rev. Wolf not to be school land. He would have appraised township 159, range 55, and township 140, range 54.

The letter will go before the board of university and school lands at its next meeting, scheduled for November 30, and it is expected that favorable action will be taken.

Orris W. Roberts, Meteorologist.

RESIGNATION IS ACCEPTED

The resignation of F. C. Himber, inspector of foods and beverages, who was arrested in Fargo on a liquor charge, presented to R. O. Baird, acting food commissioner, Fargo, was accepted by the state board of administration on Mr. Baird's recommendation.

COURT FIGHT ON GAS PRICE CUT PLANNED

Independent Oil Dealers in South Dakota Retain Lawyer to Fight McMaster

STATE SELLING GAS

Sioux Falls, S. D., Nov. 14.—Legal proceedings to prevent the sale of gasoline by the state will not be started before tomorrow, pending any action which Governor McMaster might take to stop the "war," which he started yesterday at Mitchell and at Yankton and at Sioux Falls today, A. C. Rhode, representing eight or nine independent dealers, and their attorney, George Danforth, said today.

Sioux Falls, S. D., Nov. 14.—A group of local independent gasoline and oil dealers last night announced that they had retained George D. Danforth as their attorney to aid them in the fight to prevent the state from selling gas.

In the face of the threat of legal action by the oil men, Governor McMaster placed gasoline on sale at the state penitentiary here today at 15 1/2 cents per gallon. The state depot at Mitchell sold gas at 15 cents yesterday at the Governor's order.

In Yankton gasoline is selling for 15 cents and other cities in the state are expected to have state gas for sale to the public at reduced rates. Two routes are open to the independents to bring a respite in the gas war or stop it altogether. Attorney Danforth said last night. One would be through an injunction filed in the lower courts to enjoin the Governor from authorizing the sale of gas by the state on the principle that he is exceeding his constitutional rights. The other would be through an original suit filed with the state supreme court. In this case a writ of prohibition would be sought to prevent him from using funds of the state to purchase the gas and the machinery of the state for disposing of it.

Mr. Danforth said the latter plan seems the better plan in that action by the supreme court would settle the matter for all time while an injunction might extend it indefinitely. The oil men who have retained Mr. Danforth will confer with him today and at that time will decide what plan they prefer to follow.

MUST SELL COOPERATIVELY
St. Paul, Nov. 14.—Only through organization and maintenance of co-operative gasoline selling stations will the motor vehicle owner find relief from excessive gasoline and oil prices in Minnesota under current conditions, declared John Holmberg, state commissioner of agriculture, in a report submitted to Governor J. A. O. Prew.

The report of the commissioner made last August into the price stipulation of petroleum products at the request of Governor Prew.

Commissioner Holmberg found that the ordinary gross retail margin is two cents a gallon on gasoline though a spread of 8 to 10 cents has sometimes existed.

He said dealers make a profit of 40 to 120 percent on oils and greases. The retail end of the business in Minnesota is "overdone" and there is too great an expense in the maintenance of a multiplicity of stations for which the public must pay, he said. Extravagant costs have been incurred in the purchase of station sites and erection of elaborate buildings, he said.

One-half of Minnesota's sales is made by the Standard Oil Company which through its control of the volume of business virtually sets the price.

DEFENDS MINE

Attorney-General Replies to Suit of Truax Coal Company

The state of North Dakota, replying to the suit of the Truax Coal Company attacking the eight-hour day section of the mine inspection law, maintains that the law is valid and in accordance with recognized principles. The Truax Company operates an open pit mine in the Northwestern part of the state and asserts that the digging of coal in this mine is not comparable to underground mines, and the eight-hour day therefore should not apply. It brought suit against the state mine inspector, Attorney-General, and state attorney of Burke county.

Attorney-General Shaffer, replying, declared that the eight-hour day was recognized as proper in the coal industry throughout the nation and that because men in open pit mines work in slush, mud and water in winter it is dangerous to their health.

He asks the suit, pending in United States District Court, be dismissed.

MESSENGERS MURDERED

New York, Nov. 14.—Two bank messengers were murdered by two bandits, who took $48,000 from them in a spectacular holdup today at the Fifty-fifth station of the West End subway line in Brooklyn.

APPARENTLY WILL DESERT RHINELAND

Impression Grows That Burden of Caring for Unemployed will be Given France

A SERIOUS PROBLEM

Reich Says That Burden in the Rhineland Is Too Big For It To Bear

Berlin, Nov. 14.—Political leaders were discussing today the apparent decision of the federal government to withdraw all federal support from the Ruhr and Rhineland territory, leaving those territories to their own devices or to the pleasures of France and Belgium.

The impression grew that the premiers and spokesmen of the occupied region in their secret conference yesterday had agreed on the abandonment of federal jurisdiction on those areas as a means of saving the rest of the country.

The fact that further support of the Ruhr and Rhineland populations would constitute an unbearable burden on the Reich is believed to have influenced Germany's leaders in deciding to leave on the shoulders of France and Belgium all responsibility for the fate of the German people in occupied territory.

Apparently authentic reports were in circulation yesterday that the government was to proclaim an autonomous Rhineland and considerable surprise was manifest last night when an official statement declared the government would never sanction the proclamation of a Rhineland Republic.

It was in this statement issued at the conclusion of the secret conference that the government explained anew the seriousness of the unemployment problem and of the general social and industrial conditions in the Ruhr and Rhineland, giving the impression that the Reich could no longer consider itself responsible for the occupied provinces.

This inference was strengthened when it was learned in official quarters that the government considered such a revision of its policy to be the only course at its disposal.

MAINTAIN DICTATORSHIP

Berlin, Nov. 14.—In view of the existing of the situation in Bavaria, the Munich cabinet has decided to maintain the state emergency law and to keep in force a democratic plenipotentiary in Dr. Von Kahr. The Bavarian government calls on the people to place the commonwealth above everything and to support the authorities in their efforts to consolidate order.

RIOTS IN DUESSELDORF.
Duesseldorf, Nov. 14.—One person was killed and 20 wounded during a clash last night when police and a crowd of unemployed fought a demonstration. The demonstration continued today. The crowds which paraded the streets all day yesterday protesting against the unemployment situation resumed their tactics today. In general they were orderly.

COOLIDGE FOR REDUCTION OF TAX BURDENS

Declines, However, to Explain Views Upon Mellon's Proposals

Washington, Nov. 12.—Without committing himself either to approval or disapproval of the treasury tax revision program, President Coolidge today said it is known that he regards the proposal as a step forward opening the way for meeting the demand of the country for lower taxes.

WON'T INTERFERE.
Washington, Nov. 12.—President Coolidge believes the traditional policy of the American government would preclude it from joining with the allied governments in protesting to Germany against the return of Crown Prince Frederick William or his father, the former emperor, or in measures to prevent the re-establishment of the monarchy.

VIEW OF REPARATIONS.
Washington, Nov. 12.—Although the door still is open for American helplessness in the reparations problem, President Coolidge regards the latest move in that direction as having come definitely to an end.

FRENCH WOULD PROBE GERMAN PRESENT STATE

Would Inquire Into Her Finances and Her Ability to Make Reparations Now

Paris, Nov. 12.—(By the A. P.)—The proposition for a committee of inquiry which President Barthou of the reparations commission was expected to make before that body this afternoon was explained at the French foreign office as a simple confirmation of the French point of view along this line as expressed all through the negotiations for the committee of experts which it was sought to have the United States represent.

The French proposal for an expert committee of inquiry is not regarded in official circles as a new thing but simply as a French interpretation of the manner in which an expert manner may be set up without departing from the provisions of the treaty of Versailles.

M. Foinet is understood to have indicated to M. Barthou what he considers such a committee could usefully do and ask him to present these suggestions to the reparations commission in connection with discussion of the German government's request for a hearing before the commission on Germany's capacity to pay.

The commission will decide whether to take the subject up itself for consideration or appoint a committee which would not only hear the Germans or investigate the state of Germany's resources at home and abroad.

Paris, Nov. 12.—The allied reparations commission today decided to hear representatives of Germany regarding the capacity of the Reich to pay reparations. The day of the hearing will be fixed later.

POLITICAL LEADERS BOB UP IN CHICAGO

Chicago, Nov. 12.—Political observers today attached considerable importance to the visit here of Senator Hiram Johnson of California, William Gibbs McAdoo and Chairman John T. Adams of the Republican National Committee. Although none of them would make any statement each was engaged in a series of conferences with local leaders and greeted numerous callers.

Count Tolstoy, To Speak Here, Soviet's Foe

Count Tolstoy

Count Ilya Tolstoy who, it is announced, will speak in Bismarck at the state teachers' convention, is the son of Count Leo Tolstoy, the famous Russian author and philosopher who was known in the literary world as "The Conscience of the World." Count Tolstoy was educated under the direct tutelage of his father at Yasnaya Polyana, the Tolstoy ancestral estate near Moscow. The Tolstoy family is one of the oldest of the noble Russian families, tracing its ancestry to the first rulers of Russia the Ruriks.

Although the writings of Leo Tolstoy did more than those of any other author to reveal the true nature of the despotism that ruled Russia, so great was his power with the people that although many of his followers were called to Siberia the Tsars never replied to Tolstoy's historic question, "Why don't you arrest me," until Emperor Alexander the Third said of him: "I do not want to quarrel with Tolstoy because I am only the ruler of Russia and Tolstoy rules the thought of the world." Alexander was keen enough to realize that a hand lifted against Tolstoy would antagonize the entire civilized world.

$3,000 DAMAGES GIVEN TO DUBS

Carson, N. D., Nov. 12.—On the third trial of a damage suit brought by the father of Edmund Dubbs against the Northern Pacific railway for injuries sustained by the boy when hurt in a railway accident, the jury in district court here returned a verdict of $3,000 with interest at the rate of 6 per cent from April 9, 1917. Previous juries awarded Dubbs $10,000 damages in both of two previous suits which were disallowed on appeals by the railroad to the supreme court.

BIG LOSS BY CORROSION IN UNITED STATES

Annual Wastage in Iron and Steel Is Placed at Over Three Billion

MUCH UNDERGROUND
Interesting Discoveries Made When Cast-Iron Cannons Brought up From Deep

New York, Nov. 12.—The annual wastage in iron and steel is placed at nearly $3,500,000,000 by British authorities, according to Alfred B. Flinn, director of the Engineering Foundation, in a description of research in efforts to eliminate the ravages of softening iron through graphic corrosion. Important revelations in this field have been made in a report to the foundation by J. Vipond Davies, of New York, President of the United Engineering Society.

Millions of tons of cast-iron have been put under ground and under water in pipes, tunnel linings and other engineering structures, said Director Flinn, "and it has been observed that certain kinds of soil and water act upon some kinds of cast-iron, slowly softening them so that the objects can be cut with a pen-knife. Strange to say, iron thus softened grows hard again when exposed to the air."

One of the interesting stories brought to light by the historical branch of the study has to do with several wrought iron guns raised in 1835 from the Mary Rose, an English man-of-war, sunk by the French in a battle near Portsmouth in 1545. Some of the cast-iron balls, with which the cannons were loaded, should have weighed 50 pounds, but actually weighed only 19, while others that should have weighed 70 pounds tipped the scales at only 45. On being exposed to the air they became red hot and fell to pieces.

Under Water For Century
In 1822, cast-iron cannons that went down with a pirate ship off Holyhead, Wales, nearly a century before, were raised. They were soft when recovered, but hardened upon being exposed to the air. Later, when used to fire salutes they were said to have made louder reports than any other guns.

LEGION PLANS EDUCATION

Will Unite in Drive to Obtain It in Schools During Week

Indianapolis, Nov. 12.—During American Education Week, November 12-24, the American Legion hopes to make its Americanization proposals and direct attention to the need of a national education program, announces Garland W. Powell, director of Americanism for the Legion, who is in charge of the program for the Legion.

Member posts all over the country report elaborate preparations for the week, Mr. Powell says. Working in co-operation with state, county and city superintendents of instruction, the reports indicate that this, the third annual week sponsored by the Legion, will be the most widely celebrated.

Hearty response has been given President Coolidge's proclamation setting aside this week for the purpose of bringing before the people the vital need of a unified educational program, Mr. Powell says. "Governors of most of the states have issued follow-up proclamations and, in those states where periods to be set aside by proclamation are limited by statute, the chief executives have written to the Legion offering every endorsement."

"Many foreigners come to America and, in their segregated communities, retain their foreign customs, language and methods of living. A program of education such as we propose is the best means of assimilating these people."

REPARATIONS INQUIRY OFF
London, Nov. 12.—(By the A. P.)—In consequence of the failure of the Franco-American negotiations at Washington over the scope of the proposed expert committee of inquiry Great Britain has abandoned all thought of an immediate reparations inquiry either within or without participation of France.

OPENING of the Newest and Most Up-to-Date
Dairy Plant West of the Twin Cities
Tomorrow, Nov. 14th

On this our opening day tomorrow, (Wednesday), one door west of our former location, we will serve lunch, FREE from 9 a. m. to 9 p. m., and also have a pretty souvenir for the grown people, also children, provided they are accompanied by their parents.

We cordially invite every citizen of Bismarck to come in and see our new plant.

We have discarded thousands of dollars worth of what many dairies consider modern equipment, because, within the past few months' superior methods of caring for milk have been devised.

For instance, it has recently been scientifically demonstrated that properly filtered milk is superior to clarified milk, therefore we have abandoned our new expensive clarifier, and have installed an up to the minute filtration system.

This filtration process eliminates every particle of foreign matter that may be in the milk or cream.

CONSTANT EVEN REFRIGERATION
We have installed in our refrigerating plant, a YORK ICE MACHINE. It is the only refrigerating plant of the kind in any dairy west of the twin cities, and enables us to, at all times maintain our Milk and Cream at an even temperature.

THAT BISMARCK MAY HAVE PERFECT MILK
We have been in business going on seven years, and in that short time have outgrown two locations. Our present plant, comprised of the first floor and basement, consisting of 2800 square feet each, with all modern machinery in every department, will enable us to continue to give the people of Bismarck absolutely pure Milk and Cream.

We started with a 100% inspection, both State and City, and have, without an exception maintained that high standard. In consequence of that unbroken record, we are called the One Hundred Per Cent Dairy.

YOU ARE MORE THAN WELCOME
You are welcome to come in at any time between 7 a. m. to 6 p. m. and inspect our plant, we have no special inspection days.

RUSSIAN REFUGEES LIKE BELGRADE

Belgrade, Jugoslavia, Nov. 12.—Fewer than 40,000 Russians, including a great number of men and women of the best type, are today finding refuge in Belgrade from the rigors of the Soviet regime. They evidently prefer to take their chances of voluntary exile, than risk a return to Russia no matter what fair promises are held out from that country.

It is not unusual to see a Russian who once graced a drawing room doing manual labor in Belgrade, and doing it with a will and efficiently. Gen. Wrangel, the head of the late "White Army," is living at Novi Sad, near Belgrade, and he and his companions are on short rations.

Here's Proof That Advertising Pays
Famous Wrigley Building in Chicago Being Doubled in Size

The part of the Wrigley Building erected two years ago has filled such a want that the north section, nearly double the floor area of the south section, is being added.

This north section, nearly completed, occupies the entire block, immediately across North Water Street, fronting on Michigan Avenue and reaching to the height of the main part of the first structure, with a connecting bridge.

The space in the new section is already nearly all taken by high-class firms in advance of the completion of the building.

Here is a concrete (as well as a steel and glass) proof of the saying that "advertising pays." In these magnificent buildings Mr. Wrigley has erected an impressive testimonial to this great truth. They loom large and beautiful. They typify the achievements of the man who built them. They stand as a monitor over the activity of the Nation's second city—inspiring—dominating—massive—bearing unanswerable testimony to the POWER OF ADVERTISING.

SAYS GETTING RID OF HATE IS IMPORTANT

Old Enemies Should Cease to Hate Each Other, Declares
Sir Hamilton

IS MOST IMPORTANT

Declares That He Is Trying to Show That Germans of Today Are Different

By Milton Bronner
NEA Service Staff Correspondent
London, Nov. 14.—"Get rid of the hate complex." That is the slogan
General Sir Ian Hamilton, a fighting soldier for 50 years, would like to see adopted and taken to heart by the members of the British Legion and the American Legion.
"That old enemies should cease to hate each other," said Sir Ian to me,

"is far more important than conferences about the war damages Germany shall pay."
"Europe especially is suffering from the hate complex. You see it where the French face the Germans, where the Hungarians face the Ru-manians, where the Serbs face the Bulgarians."

Fought in Many Wars
Few have a better right to talk this way than Sir Ian. He's been a soldier for nearly half a century. He has seen hard active service in all England's wars in that period—the Afghan campaign, the first Boer war, the Nile expedition, the Burmese war, the Chitral relief force, the second Boer war, and, finally, in the great war as commander-in-chief of the army at Gallipoli.

He was chief-of-staff to Kitchener in the last years of the Boer war.
He became a great friend of the famous Boer statesman—Jan Smuts.
Theodore Roosevelt was another friend. The last few years he has been devoting much of his time to the affairs of the British Legion.
One of the jobs he has set for himself is to fight hate. He says our propagandists during the war did their work too well. Many people still have their war-time conceptions of Germans.

I told him of a great American editor I know who the day after the armistice said to his men that from that time on Germans ceased to be
"Huns" and "Boches," but were simply Germans again.

"That is splendid," said Sir Ian.
"It illustrates the point exactly."

"I am striving by all the means in my power to show that the German of today is entirely different than the propaganda German of yesterday. My audiences have been mainly veterans of the war—men who went to the front and suffered in what they fully believed was a war to prevent future wars."

"The fact that I was unanimously
re-elected president for the London metropolitan area of the British Legion by 224 delegates from all branches, is evidence that the fighting men coincide with my viewpoint.
They were fully apprised of my ideals before the election—war on hate was my platform."

The Legion's Chance
"I wish the American and British Legions could get together—not for athletics and after-dinner speeches
—but for a serious effort to bring

MCCUMBER ASKS NEW LAWS FOR FARMERS' AID

becomes normal. And if the normal condition will not give the farmer the price he is entitled to, then to continue to hold it until an abnormal condition is created and a living price will be paid for his product.

"It is no answer to say to this that the farmers could so organize without a governmental law. Your regional banks and your farm banks could have organized without such a law. But they did not organize until they had a Federal law under which they might operate. Give the farmers the law under which to organize and they will be quick to take advantage of it. Place it in the power of the head of that organization to control and check the flow of grain and the farmers will understand that in that power they have hope for a higher price for their products. The bankers will understand that it means a better price for the grain which the farmers hold and they will extend them all the credit they need. They will be quick to cooperate and assist."

Bill in Congress
"Mr. President, there was pending in the Committee on Agriculture of the Senate during all of the last session of Congress—bill of comprehensive system of cooperation in the marketing of all farm products which, if enacted into law, will reach the very root of the evil and, with the assistance of an adequate protection against importations, will give to a bushel of wheat a purchasing power fully equal to its pre-war purchasing value. Any measure that fails to put the wheat raiser in a position to fix the price of his wheat will be a sham remedy and of no material benefit."

"I notice of late that this question of cooperative marketing, for which I have so long contended, is now being acknowledged as the only true remedy. Show the farmer how to organize. Provide by law the framework of such an organization.
Place it in the power of the head of such organization to control the flow of the farmer's products into the markets and you have solved the problem that is being pressed upon you for solution."

Underlying Causes
Senator McCumber preceded his suggestions for remedying the situation with a statement of his belief of the underlying causes of the difficulties of the cereal raiser. He gives them as: 1, enormous increase in labor cost, in everything the farmer must purchase and also the cost of labor employed in his own production; 2, increased cost of transportation; 3, immense increase of his taxes; 4, inability to Europe to purchase wheat and flour.
He said that taxes in North Dakota had increased about 350 percent.

WHEAT GAINS AFTER START

Shows Some Weakness at Opening But Makes
Recovery

Chicago, Nov. 14.—Although wheat showed a little weakness at the start today the market soon scored moderate gains. Offerings were limited and commission house buying was of sufficient extent to give value an upward turn.
This buying appeared to be based more or less on opinions that at least for the time being all depressing factors had been discounted. The opening, which varied from unchanged figures to 1-8 to 1-4 cents lower with December
$1.03 to $1.03 1-8 and May 1-8 and 1-4 to 1-8 and 1-2 cents was followed by a general upturn to well above yesterday's finish.

Despite arrival here of 350,000 bushels of Canadian wheat, duty paid, the market showed only transient setbacks later but gossiped about readjustments of the wheat tariff was renewed. The close was unsettled at 1-4 cents to 5-8 cents net advance December
$1.03 5-8 to $1.03 3-4, May $1.03
3-4 to 7-8 cents to $1.03 7-8.

London, Nov. 14.—The interest and courtesy shown by the London police in the welfare of the public constantly brings its reward. Piles Can Be Cured Without Surgery

An instructive book has been published by Dr. A. S. McCleary, the noted rectal specialist of Kansas City. This book tells how sufferers from Piles can be quickly and easily cured without the use of knife, scissors, "hot" iron, electricity or any other cutting or burning method, without confinement to bed and no hospital bills to pay. The method has been a success for twenty-four years and in more than eight thousand cases. The book is sent post-paid free to persons afflicted with piles or other rectal troubles who clip this item and mail it with name and address to Dr. McCleary, D542 Parkway Sanitarium, Kansas City, Mo.

ROMANCE OF YOUTH KEEPS WOMAN YOUNG

113 Years Have Passed Since Mrs. Urdang Had One Wonderful Experience

CARRIES PRAYER BOOK

Aged Woman Tells of the One Super-Man Whose Like She Has Never Met Again

BY AXELANDER HERMAN, NEA Service Staff Writer.

New York, Nov. 13.—I went to keep a rendezvous with death—a living death.

But instead I found youth—eternal youth that has kept a 113-year-old woman sparkling with life.

Yet, now that it is over, I wonder whether they aren't both the same!

For Mrs. Pescha Malka Urdang, oldest inmate of the Home for the Daughters of Israel, and one of the oldest persons living, has forgotten how to remember.

Memories of the past are gone—all but one. But that is the memory of her romance, her one romance, her very life itself.

She has grown gaunt, drawn and wrinkled in the many years that have lapsed since her husband died. Sixty years they say she has lived, but no one knows for certain.

Her children, grandchildren have become grand-children. Her progeny have been scattered all over the earth.

But for her there remains only the one memory—and the eternal wait.

She was sitting on her bed in a corner of the home when we came to see her. She was busy praying, hurrying to stave off the spectre of death, always at her elbow.

Around her were other old women, some of them well past 100.

Uncommunicative at first, she began speaking only when the chatter of the others disturbed her.

"These children," she said. "How they tire me! They haven't yet learned what living is."

It was hard making her tear herself away from her prayer book. She pores over it all day long. Yet she doesn't need the book. She knows it by heart.

"It's my life now," she said after a long wait. "My whole life. But it was different when he was alive."

Tears ran down her face. There were no lashes to stay them.

"He was so handsome," she said. "There must have been a dull thud in the inner recesses of her mind. Time had probably made it part of her subconscious thought."

"There have been none like him since. And kind—what knows the word of kindness now?"

Another lapse.

"I guess I was still young then, when we married. And what a wedding!"

"But it is so hard to remember—so hard."

"How he loved me!" she broke in. "What knows the world of such love today? How can it be gone?"

Another pause. More tears.

"There were suitors galore—rich men, powerful, good-looking, cultured, esteemed by all. But I would have none of them. Even the greatest was as nothing compared to him."

"Besides, what righteous woman would ever marry again?"

"There can be only one love, and that never dies if it is real."

"It's been keeping me alive all these years—alive in body, but in mind—I forget. I can't remember."

Instantly she turned back to her prayer book, fastened with years of thumbing. Some of its pages are torn; most of its passages are blurred. But the old woman reads on.

Several of her children are still alive.

"But they are so old and have so much trouble," said the old woman. "I couldn't trouble them any longer. So I came here to wait—just to wait."

Some of the other inmates began edgewise. One of them started whispering.

Mrs. Urdang stared up.

"There they go again. The noisy children—always noisy."

At her outburst they withdrew.

"I want to be left alone. I have so much to do and I may not have the time!"

NO SECRET NOW

Hope Hampton, pretty movie idol, is married. Has been since July, so Broadway has just learned. And her husband is Jules Brulatoir, wealthy movie magnate, who was her first manager. The ceremony is reported to have taken place in Baltimore.

She went on praying. She wouldn't be disturbed again. Suddenly she started up. "Don't you wish me a long life. Don't you wish me a long life. I don't want any of it. 'But you take my blessings. Live. And she went on: 'Blessed art Thou, O Lord...'"

NEW BOOKS COVER RANGE OF SUBJECTS

Three new books gotten out by "The Roxburgh Pub. Co., 61 Court Street, Boston, Mass.," "The Golden Age or the Depth of Time," by Fred M. Clough, "Voice of Humanity," by James Marion Morrison, and "Mount Issues," by G. A. N. have been received by the Bismarck Tribune.

They sell at $1.25 each.

"Voices of Humanity" is a small book of modern poetry containing 112 pages on a variety of subjects, many of them dealing with popular present day places and persons. "A Tale of the Roosevelt Trail" contains something of local interest for the people of North Dakota. Other interesting subjects are: "The Band of Gold," "An Ode to a Bachelor Friend," "The Humble Toilet," "Comrades in War and Peace." Most of the poems are comparatively short, and filled with musical rhythm.

"The Golden Age" is a pseudo-scientific book, one of the characters having been used in carrying out one of the most wonderful experiments in the history of mankind, it was said. After sleeping a thousand years the man used in the experiment awakens and is taken on a tour over the entire world, including Mars.

"Mount Issues" is a book of great age, says William Stocks, comes the ability to pierce the curtain between this life and the life beyond.

Stocks is 104 years and 5 months old.

Six times in the last eight years, he recalls, heavenly messengers have visited him.

The last experience he mentions was three years ago. Of the angel's conversation with him he recalls but little, though he does recollect that several more years of life were predicted for him. He was awakened, he says, in the middle of the night, to feel the presence near.

Stocks makes no claim to unusual spiritual power. He thinks merely that, at his years, man becomes refined by life, with the physical less important than to the comparatively young.

He was made manager of the Havana baseball team and crowds almost mobbed the ball park when he was expected to pitch; sporting editors contested to see who could print most about him; the "Luque" and other articles appeared in story windows and the comic weeklies began to show his face almost as frequently as they did those of President Zayas, Ambassador Crowder or "Liborio," the Cuban Uncle Sam.

And Luque along with Liborio occupies a place that the head of the republic and the American ambassador can not always command, for no cartoonist dares make a jibe at him. In fact Luque usually has a background of envious small boys and admiring young ladies in his cartoons.

When the Cuban exile returned home, the army and the navy, almost every civic organization and every local baseball association turned out to do honor to "El Habana Perfecto."

PRAISE LUQUE FOR TWIRLING

Wins Hearis of Cubans For Skill in Baseball

Havana, Nov. 14.—Adolfo Luque, premier twirler of the National League, is for the time the symbol of the small boy, the big girl, and in fact almost everybody.

Cuba, or at least that part around Havana, loves baseball and on afternoons and all day Sundays the year round there is hardly a vacant lot without its improvised diamond, in addition to the well appointed parks of the semi-professional and amateur leagues. The Cincinnati ace's career was followed last summer by hundreds of fans who stood around score boards or harried the newspapers for telephone information.

When the Cuban exile returned home, the army and the navy, almost every civic organization and every local baseball association turned out to do honor to "El Habana Perfecto."

He was made manager of the Havana baseball team and crowds almost mobbed the ball park when he was expected to pitch; sporting editors contested to see who could print most about him; the "Luque" and other articles appeared in story windows and the comic weeklies began to show his face almost as frequently as they did those of President Zayas, Ambassador Crowder or "Liborio," the Cuban Uncle Sam.

And Luque along with Liborio occupies a place that the head of the republic and the American ambassador can not always command, for no cartoonist dares make a jibe at him. In fact Luque usually has a background of envious small boys and admiring young ladies in his cartoons.

When the Cuban exile returned home, the army and the navy, almost every civic organization and every local baseball association turned out to do honor to "El Habana Perfecto."

OLD DETOUR'S DEMISE

It is the execution of "Old Man Detour," weighted down with broken auto springs and battered detour signs, he is being dropped to his final resting place in the waters of the Columbia river, near Portland, Ore. His execution is making the new Pacific Highway, from the Canadian to the Mexican borders, a reality. The road is 2069 miles long.

FAR-OFF FIJI
A hoy, there, Dx! This is the Fiji Islands, city of Suva, speaking. We just picked up one of your magazines and notice a serial story that pictures us as a country raving with man-eating cannibals.

This is news to us. The wildest things we've noticed lately are the Fiji Boy Scouts. They put on quite a show at Government House Grounds the other night.

In police court here—yes, we have a police court—this month's most exciting case concerns an Indian woman named Malowa. She was charged with stealing a can of talcum powder—shop-lifting—from the store of Stuart Ogilvie, Ltd.

As for the wilder parts of our country, Leketu and Dreketi report nothing more exciting than widespread stealing of coconuts, which are disposed of through Chinese storekeepers who act as "fences." One owner of a plantation, raided in moonlight by Fijian boys, writes indignantly to the local newspaper: "It may appear incredible, but it is nevertheless true that, here in Fiji, property is not safe. The much coddled Fijian is completely out of hand."

The famed headhunters in the island of Luzon now sell picture postcards instead of chasing visitors with a bolo.

From the Far North came word recently that the Eskimos prefer Harry Lauder to their phonographs. Americans are building a chain of giant steel towers, for radio, in China.

Ships get their bearings by radio. "Metal Mike," a gyroscopic machine which keeps a ship in a straight line without being touched after the original adjustment, has just completed successfully a trip to Europe on the liner President Adams.

Goodbye, romance! The job of making the world dull and monotonous is about completed.

MAN HUNTERS
The Royal Canadian Mounted Police celebrate. It's just 50 years since the founding of this celebrated law-and-order outfit. Movies and fiction have made them famous, deservedly so.

It's said of the "Mounties." "They never come back without their man." A case is given on record where one of them walked into Regina headquarters with his prisoner after a 30-years' chase.

Cost a lot of money, yes. But it was worth it, if only for its psychological effect. News of such exploits spreads all through the Far North.

When the Royal Mounted were organized in 1873, Indians were carrying on a feud with the soldiers, who wore blue uniforms. To impress the Indians that they were not soldiers, the Mounted decided to wear red coats—and still do.

The red coats made excellent targets. Indians naturally decided that the wearers must be fearless—just as our Indians respected the frontiersmen who let their hair grow long to indicate they weren't afraid of being scalped.

Respect for the law begins with respect for law enforcers.

The life of a Royal Mounted member is not all gun-play. He explores for his government, makes maps, sounds rivers and lakes, investigates mineral formations. He watches for forest fires in his district and helps fight them. He tells settlers how to farm scientifically. Arriving during an epidemic, he turns out to be an able doctor.

All around, the Royal Mounted are more active in the fields of peace than in playing Sherlock Holmes in the country of musk and caribou.

DERBY DOOMED
The derby, popularly known as "iron hat," appears to be doomed. It still has a big sale in the eastern states, but the trend nationally is toward soft felt hats and caps.

Rejoice and be exceedingly glad. The derby fits so tightly that it interferes with flow of blood in the scalp. Causes baldness.

That hat, in general, is useless except in severe weather, for nature grows hair on the head to protect it. Will another generation go bareheaded? Probably not. For that would be too sensible. And the trend is away from common sense rather than toward it.

UPKEEP OF AUTOMOBILE
It costs an average of $400 a year—$7.50 a week—to own and run an auto. This includes interest on original investment, gasoline, repairs, depreciation, etc.

The $400 is estimated by A. R. Hirst, Wisconsin state highway engineer. He figures Americans have nearly as much money tied up in autos—over 10 billions—as the allies owe Uncle Sam. Or you can turn the comparison around, depending on which you want to emphasize.

The national auto bill this year will be three times as much as will be spent building new apartment houses and dwellings. Ponder.

CHANGE THEIR MINDS OFTEN
Alberta's the fifth Canadian province to vote wet. Others are Quebec, Manitoba, British Columbia and the Yukon. The motive of a lot of the voters is to attract American tourists and get some of the good American dollars that otherwise would go to bootleggers.

An interesting sidelight is that Canadians can vote themselves dry or wet whenever and as often as they want to. In Ontario the cellars are getting empty, so another vote is due.

PLAYS AMERICAN STAGE
Isabel Zangwill plays the American stage because it carries no message, teaches no moral. On the law of averages, yes. But that's because our stage mirrors American life—which in many ways is a frantic, nervous rush without any destination. We think we are speeded up. So does the squirrel in the revolving cage, running in circles.

EDITORIAL REVIEW

Comments reproduced in this column may or may not express the opinion of The Tribune. They are presented here in order that our readers may have both sides of important issues which are being discussed in the press of the day.

WAKING UP THE SLEEPERS

Community workers are always much tried by the element of people called knockers, the critical folks who are always running down their home towns, and making disparaging remarks when ever any one tries to do something.

In some places humorous and appropriate ceremonies have been held for "burying the knocker." Mammoth hammers have been buried in the ground as a symbol that the hammering spirit is something, that hurts the community and should be done away with.

Besides the knockers, there is another adverse element, who might be called the sleepers. They are good natured, quiet people who don't do any positive harm and lack that sharp and sometimes bitter spirit that sets the knockers going. But these sleepers constitute a dead weight of indifference. How can they be aroused to take a greater interest in community and business projects?—Carson Press.

INDEPENDENT BUSINESS

Farming is said to be the most independent business on earth and it is provided the farmer keeps clear of debt. It would be hard to imagine a more independent man than the farmer who owns his land, stock and equipment and has the necessary capital to carry on his farming operations without creating any financial obligations which must be met at certain times. That farmer can hold his wheat or any other crop he has produced off the market until such a time as the market suits him. An ideal condition and one that is the dream of most of our agriculturalists. But, if the production of food stuffs depended upon those farmers who were in that position of independence today, we would very likely go hungry.—McLaughlin Messenger.

ADVENTURE OF THE TWINS

By Olive Roberts Barton

Mister Bob-Cat liked the dark. His eyes worked better. But he also liked the sun. It felt so good and warm on his back.

So, as he couldn't have both at once, he took turns hunting and sunning himself, and just now he was having his sun-bath on a narrow ledge of rock in a woody wild place down in Dixie Land.

For Dixie Land, my dears, is not all cotton-fields and tobacco fields and sugar fields and peanuts patches and orange groves. It has some very wild places. And it was in one of the wildest places that Mister Bob-Cat was stretched out in the sun.

That's where the Twins found him. Their busy little shoes had guided them there because the Fairy Queen would be sure to ask about her mountain folk.

Mister Bob-Cat was as sound asleep as Rip Van Winkle, so the Twins did not bother to wake him up. They were about to turn away when they heard voices whispering. Tip-toeing very softly toward the spot where the voices came from, they beheld a strange sight.

There was Paddy-foot Rabbit and Drummer Partridge and Hooty Owl, all three with their noses together like foreign ambassadors.

"Yes, sir, I've got it all fixed up!" Paddy-foot whispered excitedly, wiggling his long ears. "I just been to see Mister Otter and he promised. He says he'll do everything we asked him to and he'll be there at exactly three minutes past sunset. Now come along, you two birds and I'll show you the way."

You may be sure that by this time the Twins were bursting with curiosity.

But they stayed round, and at sunset, Mister Bob-Cat woke up and shook himself and stretched.

"Supper-time!" he remarked with a yawn. "Guess I'll climb a tree and see if I can find an owl or a nice fat partridge. Goodness! There's Paddy-foot Rabbit right over there now. I might get him."

And away he leaped. But Paddy-foot ran right under a sycamore-tree and disappeared.

"Shucks!" said Mister Bob-Cat. "Suddenly right overhead a deep voice went, 'Hoot! Hoot!'"

"Well I declare!" grinned Mister Bob-Cat, lifting his whiskers. "I'm certainly lucky." And he dug his toe-nails in that tree and shinned up in two shakes.

"But Hooty Owl lifted his wings and flew away like a shadow."

"Shucks!" said Mister Bob-Cat again. "That was stupid of me to miss two good dinners!"

That very second Drummer Partridge began to drum, and Mister Bob-Cat stopped making remarks about himself, and began to lick his whiskers again. "I'll have a fine meal yet," he said and pussy-footed off in the direction the new sound came from. (To Be Continued)

I expect you are beginning to be bored, little Marquise, with all these descriptions of baby affairs, but I feel sorry, dear little shade of yesterday, that you never had the joys that I have been describing to you.

Sydney had to leave right after the christening. When we arrived home I found pinned just inside the baby's cloak a check for a thousand dollars and a tiny note saying, "A nest egg for my godchild. Watch the nest fill up. The goose that laid this one will surely put others beside it."

Do you know, little Marquise, that I didn't even tell Jack I had found that money? I was so afraid that it would go just as the other five hundred had gone. That five hundred I had already replaced and deposited in the bank in John's name. To it the next morning I added Sydney's check.

"I am glad you like old Syd," remarked Jack to me that night at dinner. "I'm not sure that I do, Jack."

"What what's the matter? He is the salt of the earth. Almost every other woman is mad about him."

"Did it ever strike you, Jack, that possibly your friend Sydney might be the father of little Jack?"

"Good Lord! Where did you get that idea?" My husband hastily got up from the table and walked to the window. I could see he was much moved but before I could decide why, he came back and standing behind my chair he gripped my shoulders till I winced with pain.

"Never let such a thought enter your mind, Sydney Carton is the soul of honor. We would never foist his child even on me, his dearest friend."

Annual election of officers
Lloyd Spetz Post, at 8 p. m. tonight at the A. O. U. W. Hall.

EVERETT TRUE

"I wasn't speaking of foisting, Jack."

"So you think we cooked up the scheme between us?"

I could see that Jack was very angry, but I could not tell whether it was because I had found out the truth or because he was angry at me for suspecting such a thing about his friend.

Just the same, dear little Marquise, I still think that Sydney Carton is little Jack's father, for surely, as only Jack's friend, he would not feel called upon to make the baby such a magnificent present as a thousand dollar check.

"There, little Marquise, I am going to stop talking and conjecturing about Junior for a while. (Copyright, 1923, NEA Service, Inc.)

THE FOOL

By Channing Pollock.

BEGIN HERE TODAY

Clare Jewett, in love with the Rev. Daniel Gilchrist, marries Jerry Goodkind for his money. Daniel is dismissed from the fashionable Church of the Nativity in New York because of his radical sermons. Gilchrist is sent to the coal mines by Goodkind senior and wires that a big strike is settled.

A delegation of strikers comes north to interview the president and directors. They are received in Jerry's home, first Stedman, then Hennig and Umanski. Umanski is dissatisfied with results. Clare is angry because her dinner party is interrupted by Jerry's business meeting.

NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY
"I mean that that is where she was working. She's at her sister's now—up at Pittsburgh. Left the day before I was elected to come up here. I sent her a telegram."

"You don't say so," said Goodkind, then turned to Jerry with: "Anything the matter with that bell?"

"The man's busy, I suppose," said Jerry. "I'll show them out."

The elder Goodkind shook hands graciously with Stedman and Hennig. When he reached Umanski he found the impropriety he had encountered before. The tall figure burned him with his eyes.

Stedman turned at the door to whisper the promise of a visit later and Jerry, ushering them out, turned to inform his father that they were "leaving."

The tardy servant entered with an explanation that he had been signing for a box he carried, for Mrs. Goodkind. A moment later he handed it to her as she came from the music room. Clare evinced little curiosity as to its contents, putting it under her arm unopened.

"Everybody gone?" queried Goodkind, looking up from a desk at which he had seated himself.

"They're all down in the billiard room," she said with an inflection that indicated she was either bored or angered. "We wanted to make up a couple of tables of bridge, but with the men in here—as usual. Where's Jerry?"

"Downstairs for a minute," replied Goodkind.

"I've seen him just 10 minutes this week," said Clare.

"He's only been back three hours," laughed Goodkind.

"Well—" and she was showing her displeasure now—"I wish he wouldn't break up my dinner parties."

Goodkind pushed back the papers before him and moved toward her. "What have you there," he said, turning his eyes to the unopened box.

Clare started to open it. "Another—substitute," she said haltingly.

"Substitute? For what?"

"For my husband's time—and love—and companionship. She'd just had a stunning sable scarf and handed it unconcernedly to her father-in-law."

"H-m! You don't seem much surprised," he said.

"No." Whenever Jerry's been away longer than usual, or has done something he's little ashamed of, there's something of his sort for me. There was injured pride in her tone.

"Must have been a whopper this time," laughed Goodkind.

"Yes," said Clare seriously, her eyes taking on a look of calculation. "A pretty good one, I should say, if you ask me," said the husband's father airily.

"Yes." The answer was unconvincing. She put the scarf back into its box. Goodkind had caught the unhappiness in her attitude.

"Up my word," he said. "I don't know what you women want. A man works his heart and soul out to get you things—and still, you're not satisfied."

Clare looked up appealingly. "Maybe we'd like a little 'heart and soul,'" she said, taking his own words.

"You're not crying?" he said, leaning over her. She looked up through tear-blurred eyes and nodded sheepishly. "My God," he said. "Can you beat it?"

"She rose and walked to a mirror. "I'll be down in a minute," she said.

"Tell Riggs—will you—if any one comes, I'll be talking to Jerry." He followed her and put a hand on her shoulder. "And—buck—up. There are people worse off than we are—and it's a great life if you don't weaken."

Clare stood before the mirror, a moment, first brushing aside the intrusive tears, then covering their red wake with powder. It was as a reflection over her shoulder in the glass that she saw the door open and Daniel Gilchrist came in.

CHAPTER XI
Opening Old Wounds

Clare stood a moment, surveying the man in reflection as she had done a thousand times in her heart since they had faced in dramatic intensity in a darkened church room. He did not see her. He stood there, a meek figure, indeed.

Suddenly Clare turned. Gilchrist looked up in surprise, then, a bit doubtful, bowed and made a movement toward the door.

"Oh, come in," she said in bold invitation. "I'm just powdering my nose. Does that offend your reverence?"

"On the contrary," he said with a smile. "I agree with the man who said, 'Put your trust in God, but keep your powder dry.'"

They laughed, and with the laughter the wall that was between them crumbled and vanished.

"When did you get in?" Clare asked, quietly.

"Half an hour ago."

"Had dinner?"

"On the train. I was starved." He smiled again. "Thank goodness, they don't charge for dinner by the mile. Riggs said your father-in-law was in here."

"He'll be up in a moment—won't you sit down? We haven't had five minutes together since."

"Since—" he started. But the wall had risen again and there was an awkward pause.

It was Clare who broke the pause. "I was Clare who broke the pause."

"I was Clare who broke the pause."

B. & P. W. Dinner Proves Success With 44 Present

The dinner given by the Business and Professional Women's club last night for members at the club rooms proved a very live and jolly occasion. Forty-four members were in attendance. Serving the dinner which was prepared and served by Mrs. E. Hamilton a half hour was spent in singing conducted by Miss Jennie Smith of New Lisbon, Wis., music supervisor, who has been directing music at the teachers institutes in North Dakota.

At the close of the enthusiastic singing a short business session was held with Mrs. Evelyn Harris, newly elected president presiding. Reports from the various committees were heard and a message of condolence to E. G. Patterson in his time of bereavement was composed. It was also decided at this meeting that a silver tea should be given by the club, Friday, Nov. 23 with special invitations being sent out to the visiting teachers who will be attending the meeting of the Teachers Association.

Mrs. E. P. Quinn was named chairman of the silver tea committee with Mrs. Alfred Zuger, Mrs. E. M. Stanton, Mrs. A. P. Lenhart, and Mrs. E. C. White as committee members.

AT THE MOVIES

CAPITOL

Admirers of Leah Baird, the fascinating screen star, will be eager to see her in her latest success "The Destroying Angel," which comes to the Capitol theatre tonight for an engagement of two days. Miss Baird has long been recognized as one of the most convincing and powerful actresses of the screen, but even her friends had hardly suspected the brilliant comedy talents she discloses in this fine pieturisation of Louis Joseph Vance's enthralling story. Miss Baird's friends, who have acclaimed her the Jane Crowl of the films, are now likely to allude to her as the Jan Claire of the silver screen, for certainly in this picture she is challenging comparison with the histrionic talents of both charming artists.

FAR-OFF FIJI

A hoy, there, Dx! This is the Fiji Islands, city of Suva, speaking. We just picked up one of your magazines and notice a serial story that pictures us as a country raving with man-eating cannibals.

This is news to us. The wildest things we've noticed lately are the Fiji Boy Scouts. They put on quite a show at Government House grounds the other night.

In police court here—yes, we have a police court—this month's most exciting case concerns an Indian woman named Malowa. She was charged with stealing a can of talcum powder—shop-lifting—from the store of Stuart Ogilvie, Ltd.

As for the wilder parts of our country, Leketu and Dreketi report nothing more exciting than widespread stealing of coconuts, which are disposed of through Chinese storekeepers who act as "fences." One owner of a plantation, raided in moonlight by Fijian boys, writes indignantly to the local newspaper: "It may appear incredible, but it is nevertheless true that, here in Fiji, property is not safe. The much coddled Fijian is completely out of hand."

The famed headhunters in the island of Luzon now sell picture postcards instead of chasing visitors with a bolo.

From the Far North came word recently that the Eskimos prefer Harry Lauder on their phonographs. Americans are building a chain of giant steel towers, for radio, in China.

Ships get their bearings by radio. "Metal Mike," a gyroscopic machine which keeps a ship in a straight line without being touched after the original adjustment, has just completed successfully a trip to Europe on the liner President Adams.

Goodbye, romance! The job of making the world dull and monotonous is about completed.

MAN HUNTERS

The Royal Canadian Mounted Police celebrate. It's just 50 years since the founding of this celebrated law-and-order outfit. Movies and fiction have made them famous, deservedly so.

It's said of the "Mounties." "They never come back without their man." A case is given on record where one of them walked into Regina headquarters with his prisoner after a 30-years chase.

Cost a lot of money, yes. But it was worth it, if only for its psychological effect. News of such exploits spreads all through the Far North.

When the Royal Mounted were organized in 1873, Indians were carrying on a feud with the soldiers, who wore blue uniforms. To impress the Indians that they were not soldiers, the Mounted decided to wear red coats—and still do.

The red coats made excellent targets. Indians naturally decided that the wearers must be fearless—just as our Indians respected the frontiersmen who let their hair grow long to indicate they weren't afraid of being scalped.

Respect for the law begins with respect for law enforcers.

The life of a Royal Mounted member is not all gun-play. He explores for his government, makes maps, sounds rivers and lakes, investigates mineral formations. He watches for forest fires in his district and helps fight them. He tells settlers how to farm scientifically. Arriving during an epidemic, he turns out to be an able doctor.

All around, the Royal Mounted are more active in the fields of peace than in playing Sherlock Holmes in the country of musk and caribou.

DERBY DOOMED

The derby, popularly known as "iron hat," appears to be doomed. It still has a big sale in the eastern states, but the trend nationally is toward soft felt hats and caps.

Rejoice and be exceedingly glad. The derby fits so tightly that it interferes with flow of blood in the scalp. Causes baldness.

That hat, in general, is useless except in severe weather, for nature grows hair on the head to protect it. Will another generation go bareheaded? Probably not. For that would be too sensible. And the trend is away from common sense rather than toward it.

UPKEEP OF AUTOMOBILE

It costs an average of $400 a year—$7.50 a week—to own and run an auto. This includes interest on original investment, gasoline, repairs, depreciation, etc.

The $400 is estimated by A. R. Hirst, Wisconsin state highway engineer. He figures Americans have nearly as much money tied up in autos—over 10 billions—as the allies owe Uncle Sam. Or you can turn the comparison around, depending on which you want to emphasize.

The national auto bill this year will be three times as much as will be spent building new apartment houses and dwellings. Ponder.

CHANGE THEIR MINDS OFTEN

Alberta's fifth Canadian province to vote wet. Others are Quebec, Manitoba, British Columbia and the Yukon. The motive of a lot of the voters is to attract American tourists and get some of the good American dollars that otherwise would go to bootleggers.

An interesting sidelight is that Canadians can vote themselves dry or wet whenever and as often as they want to. In Ontario the cellars are getting empty, so another vote is due.

PLAYS AMERICAN STAGE

Israel Zangwill plays the American stage because it carries no message, teaches no moral. On the law of averages, yes. But that's because our stage mirrors American life—which in many ways is a frantic, nervous rush without any destination. We think we are speeded up. So does the squirrel in the revolving cage, running in circles.

EDITORIAL REVIEW

Comments reproduced in this column are not necessarily the opinion of The Tribune. They are presented here in order that our readers may have both sides of important issues which are being discussed in the press of the day.

WAKING UP THE SLEEPERS

Community workers are always much tried by the element of people called knockers, the critical folks who are always running down their home towns, and making disparaging remarks when ever any one tries to do something.

In some places humorous and appropriate ceremonies have been held for "burying the knacker." Mammuth hammers have been buried in the ground as a symbol that the hammering spirit is something that hurts the community and should be done away with.

Besides the knockers, there is another adverse element, who might be called the sleepers. They are good natured, quiet people who don't do any positive harm and lack that sharp and sometimes bitter spirit that sets the knockers going. But these sleepers constitute a dead weight of indifference. How can they be aroused to take a greater interest in community and business projects?—Carson Press.

INDEPENDENT BUSINESS

Farming is said to be the most independent business on earth and it is, provided the farmer keeps clear of debt. It would be hard to imagine a more independent man than the farmer who owns his land, stock and equipment and has the necessary capital to carry on his farming operations without creating any financial obligations which must be met at certain times. That farmer can hold his wheat or any other crop he has produced off the market until such a time as the market suits him. An ideal condition and one that is the dream of most of our agriculturalists. But, if the production of food stuffs depended upon those farmers who were in that position of independence today, we would very likely go hungry.—McLaughlin Messenger.

ADVENTURE OF THE TWINS

By Olive Roberts Barton

Mister Bob-Cat liked the dark. His eyes worked better. But he also liked the sun. It felt so good and warm on his back.

So, as he couldn't have both at once, he took turns basking and sunning himself, and just now he was having his sun-bath on a narrow ledge of rock in a woolly wild place down in Dixie Land.

For Dixie Land, my dears, is not all cotton-lands and tobacco fields and sugar fields and peanut patches and such like. It has some very wild places. And it was in one of the wildest places that Mister Bob-Cat was stretched out in the sun.

That's where the Twins found him. Their busy little shoes had guided them there because the Fairy Queen would be sure to ask about her mountain folk.

Mister Bob-Cat was as sound asleep as Rip Van Winkle, so the Twins didn't bother to wake him up. They were about to turn away when they heard a voice whispering, "Tip-toe! Very softly toward the spot where the volcano came from; they beheld a strange sight."

There was Paddy-foot Rabbit and Drummer Partridge and Hooty Owl, all three with their noses together like foreign ambassadors.

"Yes, sir, I've got it all fixed up!" Paddy-foot whispered excitedly, wiggling his long ears. "I just been to see Mister Otter and he promised me that he'd do everything we asked him to do and he'll be here in exactly three minutes past sunset. Now come along, you two birds and I'll show you the way."

You may be sure that by this time the Twins were bursting with curiosity.

But they stayed 'round, and at sunset, Mister Bob-Cat woke up and shook himself and stretched.

"Supper-time!" he remarked with a yawn. "Guess I'll climb a tree and see if I can find an owl or a nice fat partridge. Goodness! There's Paddy-foot Rabbit right over there now. I might get him."

And away he leaped. But Paddy-foot ran right under a sycamore-tree and disappeared.

"Shucks!" said Mister Bob-Cat. "Suddenly right overhead a deep voice went, 'Hoot! Hoot!'"

"Well I declare!" grinned Mister Bob-Cat, licking his whiskers. "I'm certainly lucky." And he dug his claws in to that tree and shinned up in two shakes.

"But Hooty Owl lifted his wings and flew away like a shadow."

"Shucks!" said Mister Bob-Cat again. "That was stupid of me to miss two good dinners!"

That very second Drummer Partridge began to drum, and Mister Bob-Cat stopped making remarks about himself, and began to lick his whiskers again. "I'll have a fine meal yet," he said and pussy-footed off in the direction the new sound came from.

I expect you are beginning to be bored, little Marquise, with all these descriptions of baby affairs. Well, I feel sorry, dear little Marquise, that you never had the joys that I have been describing to you.

Sydney had to leave right after the christening. When we arrived home I found pinned just inside the baby's cloak a check for a thousand dollars and a tiny note saying, "A nest egg for my godchild. Watch the nest all up. The goose that laid this one will surely put others beside it."

Do you know, little Marquise, that I didn't even tell Jack I had found that money? I was so afraid that it would go just as the other five hundred had gone. That five hundred I had already replaced and deposited in the bank in John Jr.'s name. So it this next morning I added Sydney's check.

"I am glad you like old Syd," remarked Jack to me that night at dinner.

"I'm not sure that I do, Jack." "What's the matter? He is the salt of the earth. Almost every other woman is mad about him."

"Did it ever strike you, Jack, that possibly your friend Sydney might be the father of little Jack?"

"Good Lord! Where did you get that idea?" My husband hastily got up from the table and walked to the window. I could see he was much moved but before I could decide why, he came back and standing behind my chair he gripped my shoulders till I winced with pain.

"Never let such a thought enter your mind, Sidney Carlton is the soul of honor. We would never foist his child even on me, his dearest friend."

THE FOOL

By Channing Pollock

BEGIN HERE TODAY

Clare Jewett, in love with the Reverend Daniel Gilchrist, marries Jerry Goodkind for his money. Daniel is dismissed from the fashionable Church of the Nativity in New York because of his radical sermons. Gilchrist is sent to the coal mines by Goodkind senior and wires that a big strike is settled.

A delegation of strikers comes north to interview the president and directors. They are received in Jerry's home, first Stedman, then Hannan and Umanak. Umanak is dissatisfied with results. Clare is angry because her dinner party is interrupted by Jerry's business meetings.

Now go on with the story. "I mean that that to where she was working. She's at her sister's now-up at Pittsburg. Left the day before I was elected to come up here. I sent her a telegram."

"You don't say so," said Goodkind, then turned to his sister, "telling the matter with that bell?"

"The man's busy, I suppose," said Jerry. "I'll show them out."

The elder Goodkind shook hands graciously with Stedman and Hennig. When he reached Umanak he found the immobility he had encountered before. The tall figure burned him with his eyes.

Stedman turned at the door to whisper the promise of a visit later and Jerry, ushering them out, turned to inform his father that they were "swine."

The tardy servant entered with an explanation that he had been signing for a box he carried for Mrs. Goodkind. Clare later had heard it to her as she came from the music room. Clare evinced little curiosity as to its contents, putting it under her arm unopened.

"Everybody goes?" queried Goodkind, looking up from a desk at which he had seated himself.

"They're all down in the billiard room," he said, with an indication that indicated she was either bored or angered. "We wanted to make up a couple of tables of bridge, but with the men in here—as usual. Where's Jerry?"

"Downstairs for a minute," replied Goodkind.

"I've seen him just 10 minutes this week," said Clare.

"He's only back three hours," laughed Goodkind.

"Well—and she was showing her displeasure now—"I wish he wouldn't break up my dinner parties."

Goodkind pushed back the papers before him and moved toward her. "What have you there?" he said, turning his eyes to the unopened box.

Clare started to open it. "Another substitute," she said haltingly.

"Substitute? For what?"

"For my husband's time—and love—and companionship." She held up a stanning sable scarf and handed it unconcernedly to her father-in-law.

"You don't seem much surprised," he said.

"No." Whenever Jerry's been away longer than usual, or has done something he's a little ashamed of, there's something of this sort for me. There was injured pride in her tone.

"Must have been a whopper this time," laughed Goodkind.

"No," said Clare, seriously, his ruining women's feet. "We made a mistake. This isn't news."

"Pretty generous husband, if you ask me," said the husband's father, smiling.

"Yes." The answer was unconvincing. She put the scarf back into its box. Goodkind had caught the unhappiness in her attitude.

"Upon my word," he said, "I don't know what you women want. A man works his heart and soul out to get you things and still, you're not satisfied."

Clare looked up appealingly. "Maybe we'd like a little heart and soul," she said, taking his own words.

"We're not crying," he said, leaning over her. She looked up through tear-blurred eyes and nodded sheepishly. "My God," he said. "Can you beat it?"

She rose and walked to a mirror. "I'll be down in a minute," she said.

"Tell Riggs—will you—if any one comes, I'll be talking to Jerry." He followed her and put a hand on her shoulder. "And—buck up. There are people worse off than we are—and it's a great life if you don't weaken."

Clare stood before the mirror, a moment, first brushing aside the intrusive tears, then covering their red wake with white powder. It was as if she were looking at her reflection in the glass that she saw the door open and Daniel Gilchrist came in.

not face because it brought memories, as all memories do.

"I understand you're very happy in your new profession," she said.

"Yes," he answered. "You've got—everything—you want?" she pursued, haltingly.

"No, I haven't everything I want," he said frankly, "but I'm happy."

"My father-in-law says that if you settle this strike you're to be—"

She put her hand to her mouth in a gesture of self-reproach. "—but that's a business secret," she said. "I might tell you, though. He says it'll make you a big man in the company—with a tremendous salary. You mustn't give that away?"

"The secret?" asked Daniel, smiling.

"The salary," said Clare. "I suppose you've got over that." He smiled. "So—you don't really seem to care anything by giving up your church?"

"No," he said thoughtfully. "Queer as it seems, sometimes I think I've gained—in opportunity."

Clare looked away, reflectively. "Perhaps one might have eaten one's cake and had it, too," she said, chiding to herself.

"What's that?" Gilchrist turned eyes that were half eager, half reproachful, upon her.

"You frightened me so that night with the bugaboo of poverty," she went on, with something of despair in

COLLINS NOT AFTER NEW JOB

Philadelphia, Nov. 14.—Reports that a deal was pending which would send him to Washington as manager were denied yesterday by Eddie Collins, captain and second baseman of the Chicago American League baseball club, upon his return from a hunting trip in the Maine woods.

"I still want to concentrate on my playing and not bother about the cares of management," said Collins. "I will be back with the White Sox next season."

McGRAW NOT MAKING TRADES

New York, Nov. 14.—Before departing yesterday on the steamship George Washington for a trip to Europe, John McGraw, veteran manager of the New York Giants declared he had no other deals immediately in view for the National League champions.

In baseball circles, however, the transaction completed last night by which the Giants obtained Southworth and Oeschger from Boston in exchange for Stengel, Cunningham and Benfroft, who is to manage the Braves, was regarded as the first step in McGraw's reconstruction program.

SHORT SCHEDULE IS FAVORED

Chicago, Nov. 14.—Club owners of the American Association at their annual meeting here in December will be asked to adopt a shorter schedule for the 1924 season, President Hickey said last night. He has mailed a tentative schedule calling for 154 games to the club owners for their approval. Previously the league played 168 games. The proposed schedule sets April 16 as the opening day and September 21 for the final games.

President Hickey said the shorter schedule would permit better weather conditions for the playing of the "little world's series" between pennant winners of the International League and American Association.

The recent series between the Kansas City and Baltimore clubs, was interrupted for five days because of inclement weather and this delay caused a lack of interest in the games, President Hickey said.

Lady Lochinvar Goes East Not West For Success

By HORTENSE SAUNDERS.
NEA Service Writer.
New York, Nov. 14.—The latest Lady Lochinvar to go east, instead of west, and make herself successful in New York is Evelyn Vaughan. She left San Francisco to become a Broadway star.

She has turned out to be a successful dealer in real estate and has built up one of the most unique residential districts in Gotham.

"Of course," she confided to me, "I really knew less about real estate than a teething baby when I arrived. And I had only money enough for current living expenses. But now I have acquired an interest in ten houses and a theater!"

It began this way: Miss Vaughan had theatrical successes enough in California to warrant her coming to New York and experiment with the drama. She wanted her own theater, where she could have a hand in producing the type of plays she believes the average theatergoer wants to see. And she wanted to act in her own plays.

"But Broadway couldn't see it my way, she goes on. 'They weren't at all interested in renting a theater to an aspiring actress who had only theories to offer.'"

Costly "Reason"
"I could have made them listen to reason—reason that spoke in terms of two thousand dollars a week for rent and a gross receipt of $5,000, or that would have built me a theater for $100,000. But just to let space to some unknown woman who wanted to do slightly different things—that was not to be thought of."

But Miss Vaughan kept thinking. If she couldn't have a theater on Broadway, why not have one somewhere else? One day, a friend, showing her through the picturesque slums of Greenwich Village, pointed out a group of rookeries on Commerce street that formed an elbow around a miscellaneous assortment of backyards.

She spotted a real old-fashioned barn in the midst of them. Then she knew she had found her theater. So in a short time she had formed

Chicago, Nov. 14.—The boy wonder of today when Willie Hoppe and Welker Cochran cross cues here in a play-off for the 18.2 balk line billiard championship.

Hoppe, champion for years, cued his way into a tie with Cochran, young star from the coast, in the recent championship tournament at New York. Both Hoppe and Cochran made sensational rallies to win the matches that deadlocked the title.

The play-off here will be at 1500 points, in three blocks of 500, to be played nightly at the auditorium. It is predicted these matches will break all attendance records for billiards in the history of the sport.

What They Bargained for

By MYRA CURTIS LANE

"Yes, she's back again, with her husband gone and half her fortune gone, and a little sense in her head at last, I reckon."

"Poor woman, she sure has learned something."

"I should say so. She was a fool to think he wasn't after her money. A man half her age, too."

"Well, we live and learn. She's quite pretty about it all."

"Oh, quite!"

The conversation had reference to Adeline Graham, spinster, aged forty-six, with a fortune in her own right. She had married a foreigner, aged twenty-seven, after a brief and ardent wooing. They had gone to his ancestral home in Europe, which, of course, turned out to be a sham, and Adeline had paid him half her fortune to keep away from her for ever. In her own home, Adeline sat musing. She was musing over the events of those three hectic months. And she was not nearly so disillusioned as people supposed.

Why does, how can any woman of forty-eight suppose that a man of about half her age has fallen desperately in love with her? Has it ever occurred to the innocent bystander that the woman, unless she is a fool, is not nearly so disillusioned as is generally thought? Let us listen to these conversations. First, Adeline to her chum, Amy Sturt:

"My dear, I know you think I'm a fool to marry him. But he loves me, and the others who have paid me that compliment have all been just as desperate after my money. Why shouldn't I give it a trial?"

"You're so happy now, Adeline, and he'll make you miserable. A foreigner, too."

"I don't see why you should grudge me a little happiness."

"Oh, well, if you put it that way, Adeline—"

Second: Adeline and her sutor: "Ever since the moment when I set eyes on you first you have been the star of my heart, the light of my ways. I adore you, Adeline. If you won't marry me I shall blow my brains out."

"Do you really care as much as that?"

"I can't live without you."

"Then I will," Adeline was really moved. But underneath something was watching in an amused sort of way. It knew all right.

Third conversation, two months later: "So this cottage is the ancestral castle?"

"Well, what about it?"

"You seem to have exaggerated things a good deal, that's all." They had come to address each other sarcastically by now.

"You got your bargain—a husband."

"And you got yours—money."

He glared at her. "If you're tired of it I'm quite willing to make arrangements."

"What do you mean by that?"

"Give me enough to live on and I won't trouble you any more. I did care for you in a way, but you can't expect a man to love an old woman of fifty forever. Besides, you'll be sixty soon."

Adeline laughed a bitter little laugh. "That's the best side of your nature that I've seen as yet," she said.

"How's that?"

"Why, I like you better when you're frank than as a creeping hypocrite. But I don't like you anyway—much. Suppose I give you half my capital—will you agree to a permanent separation?"

He was frightened, he was so eager. He was a little touched, too. "I'll agree to that, of course, but—"

"Oh, it's worth it. I got my bargain."

Two months later Adeline was back in America with her maiden name and her diminished fortune. And her chum, Amy Sturt, was sitting with her in her house. Amy didn't say "I told you so." She was a real chum.

"Oh, don't pity me, Amy. I'm very glad I went through it all."

"That awful man!"

"I don't know about that, Amy. He wanted my money, but so did the others. And I saw through him all the time, and I knew how it would end. But, you see, I was forty-six, and I wanted the experience of life before I got to be an old woman. Each of us got what he bargained for, and thank heaven, I could afford to pay for my amusement."

Magic Moccasins

When Hiawatha strapped on his magic moccasins he could measure a mile at a single stride. But, at best, he traveled at a snail's pace compared to the speed you can make today.

Glance through your paper and in a few moments you have covered the earth. You jump from New York to San Francisco, Pittsburgh to London, Toledo to Timbuktu. You know what is going on the world over almost as soon as the events occur.

Turn to the advertising columns and you are transported to the grocer's, the clothier's, the music store; you visit the factory of a manufacturer, or talk with the inventor of a new household appliance.

Right in your own armchair, unhurried, unworried and without effort, you can make your choice of good merchandise, check up values and compare prices.

Merchants and manufacturers who put advertisements in this paper must give good value. They know that advertising, by increasing the number of their sales, will enable them to lower prices and give you more for your money—and at the same time increase their own income.

K. C. TO HAVE ANNUAL LIVE STOCK SHOW

Opens For Seven Day Run With Ten Acre Floor Space

Kansas City, Nov. 14.—The American Royal Livestock Show, which opens here November 17 for a run of seven days, will occupy more than 10 acres of floor space in the $600,000 building erected last year to house the exhibition. The show will draw 2,000 head of cattle in the ear-lot section alone, officials said. These animals are ready or nearly ready to be converted into prime beef, and will be shown in the open stock yards. In the breeding classes of beef cattle, more than 300 head each of Herefords and Shorthorns and more than 100 head of Angus cattle already are entered.

The showing of 150 head of milking Shorthorns, arranged for the exhibition, will be an innovation as this will be the first time this type of cattle has been displayed at any national show west of the Mississippi River. Floor space also has been set aside for the dog and pet stock shows.

The horse has not been forgotten. Draft horses and many head of saddle, roadster, driving, hunter and jumping horses, many of the latter two classes entered by the United States Army, will be exhibited.

This year a new department has been added, in which members of all accredited live stock clubs in the United States will have an opportunity to exhibit the results of their club work. An interstate prize competition is promised.

GRAIN RATE REDUCTION CASE FOUGHT

Battalions Mustered in Kansas City by Eight Com-plaining Railroads

Kansas City, Mo., Nov. 14.—Battalions were mustered here today by eight complaining states and defendant railroads for a ten-day hearing before representatives of the Interstate Commerce Commission on a petition for reduction of grain rates on grain, grain products and hay. The fight for lower rates will be led by Clyde M. Reed, chairman of the Kansas Public Utilities Commission and it is expected that it would be opened this morning by Dr. Henry Waters, editor of the weekly Kansas City Star with a review of the agricultural situation in the grain belt and an outline of reasons why this region seeks rate readjustments.

Missouri, Iowa, Oklahoma, Minnesota, Kansas, North and South Dakota, were represented.

The Interstate Commerce Commission recently held that records placed before it by western states in their efforts to obtain rate reductions was insufficient for an order of reduction, but ordered the case opened for retrial.

PETITION FOR PARDON WILL BE PRESENTED

A petition for the pardon of Tommy McNeill, serving a life sentence in the state penitentiary, will be presented to the state pardon board at its December meeting, it is expected. McNeill has been confined to the prison since February, 1920. He was convicted because it was alleged; he handed his brother a revolver with which the latter committed murder. It was maintained by McNeill's friends that he did this without knowledge that his brother would so use it.

Last winter the legislature enacted a law, amending the statute providing that one convicted of first degree murder could not be pardoned until he had served 25 years, or half his life expectancy. The amendment permitted one in McNeill's position to apply for a pardon. McNeill has been employed in the prison barber shop and has been a pitcher on the baseball team.

A Ready-Made Family

By JOHN PALMER

Royston, a man of forty-five, told Mrs. Underwood he was a widower. He was very attentive to Mrs. Underwood's daughter, Dolly, when ever he stayed at her house. He was a drummer, and passed through the town every few weeks, generally spending from Friday to Monday with the widow.

Yes, Royston was quite attentive to Dolly. It reached the point where he asked her to marry him. Dolly wasn't sure. She liked Royston, but he was something of a mystery. He had, in fact, hinted to her of a mystery in his life.

"You know his route, Dolly; why don't you take a holiday and follow him? You know the hotels he stays at and all," urged her mother.

Dolly was thirty-five, fond of Royston, and saw little prospect of any other suitors. She didn't like deceiving him, but she felt it was her duty to herself not to fall into a trap. So in the end, heavily veiled, she set out to follow in Royston's route, on the same train.

At Pycroft, his first main center, Royston got off the train. A half-grown lad, waiting upon the station platform, rushed up to him. "Hello, Dad!"

Dolly nearly fainted. However, there was no Mrs. Royston in Pycroft. She discovered that Royston boarded his son at a quite select school in the town, and stayed himself at a hotel.

So Royston had a son. Well, it wasn't so bad. This must be a mystery. She almost decided to go home and think it over.

Instead of which, knowing Royston's routine pretty accurately, she went on to Holmsby, his second main center. The next day, when Royston's train came in, there was Royston, and there was another lad to meet him.

"Hello, Dad!"

"Hello, Dad!"

They walked up the street together in the most affectionate way, poor Dolly trailing after them until All turned in at a very select boarding academy for boys, and Royston went on to a hotel.

So Royston had another son! He must have had two wives, then, even if they had died—or deserted him. And he had proposed marriage to her. The second round!

It was a very thoughtful Dolly that took the train to Royston's third center, Mapleton. She waited in town for three days. On the fourth she went to meet Royston's train. On the platform was a handsome and stylish young woman, who promptly fell into Royston's arms without a word.

So this was the wife!

Dolly trailed them, saw that she did not enter a boarding school—she was a grown-up young woman, though, of course, not the mother of the boys. They went to a hotel, and Dolly followed them in. But then she had not the heart to make inquiries. She sat down on the porch and broke into bitter tears.

And in the midst of it who should she see standing in front of her but Royston and the pretty girl. On Royston's face there was an expression of unutterable astonishment.

"Dolly!"

"How dare you speak to me, you—you monster!"

"Why, Dolly, what's the matter? How did you get here?" demanded Royston in consternation. "This is my daughter, Lottie. I wanted you to meet her. I wanted to tell you -"

"Your daughter? And what about your sons—the one at Holmsby and the one at Pycroft?" demanded Dolly furiously.

"Dolly, dear, let me talk to her," suggested Lottie. "You see, Miss Underwood, Dad's told me all about you."

"He never told me anything about you, and I wouldn't believe a word about what he said, anyway," returned Dolly acridly.

"Oh, dear, you don't understand. Daddy got so lonesome on the road, and at last he had to be arranged to have me and my two brothers each live in different places, so that he could see each of us in turn to cheer him up. And he was afraid to tell you, and he—he loves you and wants us to be all together."

"That's how it is," said Royston sheepishly. "Don't you think you can stand for us—all of us?"

"Oh, I guess so. It's just the shock of finding a ready-made family," Dolly answered.

COLLINS NOT
AFTER NEW JOB

Philadelphia, Nov. 14.—Reports that a deal was pending which would send him to Washington as manager were denied yesterday by Eddie Collins, captain and second baseman of the Chicago American League baseball club, upon his return from a hunting trip in the Maine woods.

"I still want to concentrate on my playing and not bother about the cares of management," said Collins. "I will be back with the White Sox next season."

McGRAW NOT MAKING TRADES

New York, Nov. 14.—Before departing yesterday on the steamship George Washington for a trip to Europe, John McGraw, veteran manager of the New York Giants declared he had no other deals immediately in view for the National League champions.

In baseball circles, however, the transaction completed last night by which the Giants obtained Southworth and Oeschger from Boston in exchange for Stengel, Cunningham and Benetoff, who is to manage the Braves, was regarded as the first step in McGraw's reconstruction program.

SHORT SCHEDULE IS FAVORED

Chicago, Nov. 14.—Club owners of the American Association at their annual meeting here in December will be asked to adopt a shorter schedule for the 1934 season. President Hickey said last night. He has mailed a tentative schedule calling for 154 games to the club owners for their approval. Previously the league played 168 games. The proposed schedule sets April 16 as the opening day and September 21 for the final games.

President Hickey said the shorter schedule would permit better weather conditions for the playing of the "little world's series" between pennant winners of the International League and American Association.

The recent series between the Kansas City and Baltimore clubs, was interrupted for five days because of inclement weather and this delay caused a lack of interest in the games, President Hickey said.

Lady Lochinvar
Goes East Not
West For Success

By HORTENSE SAUNDERS.
NEA Service Writer.

New York, Nov. 14.—The latest Lady Lochinvar to go east, instead of west, and make herself successful in New York is Evelyn Vaughan. She left San Francisco to become a Broadway star.

She has turned out to be a successful dealer in real estate and has built up one of the most unique residential districts in Gotham. "Of course," she confided to me, "I really know less about real estate than a teething baby when I arrived. And I had only money enough for current living expenses. But now I have acquired an interest in ten houses and a theater!"

It began this way: Miss Vaughan had theatrical successes enough in California to warrant her coming to New York and experiment with the drama. She wanted her own theater, where she could have a hand in producing the type of plays she believes the average theatergoer wants to see. And she wanted to act in her own plays.

"But Broadway couldn't see it my way," she goes on. "They weren't at all interested in renting a theater to an aspiring actress who had only theories to offer."

Costly "Reason"

"I could have made them listen to reason—reason that spoke in terms of two thousand dollars a week for rent and a gross gate receipt of $5,000, or that would have built me a theater for $100,000. But just to let space to some unknown woman who wanted to do slightly different things—that was not to be thought of."

But Miss Vaughan kept thinking. If she couldn't have a theater in Broadway, why not have one somewhere else? One day, a friend, showing her through the picturesque slums of Greenwich Village, pointed out a group of rookeries on Commerce street that formed an elbow around a miscellaneous assortment of backyards.

She spotted a real old-fashioned barn in the midst of them. Then she knew she had found her theater. So in a short time she had formed

WELKER COCHILAN

By NEA Service
Chicago, Nov. 14.—The boy wonder of old will meet the boy wonder of today when Willie Hoppe and Welker Cochran cross cues here in a play-off for the 18.2 bulk line billiard championship.

Hoppe, champion for years, cued his way into a tie with Cochran, young star from the coast, in the recent championship tournament at New York. Both Hoppe and Cochran made sensational rallies to win the matches that deadlocked the title.

The play-off here will be at 1500 points, in three blocks of 500, to be played nightly at the auditorium. It is predicted these matches will break all attendance records for billiards in the history of the sport.

Latest Record Releases

Two Violin Masterpieces by Kreisler—Alda,
McCormack and Mardones Among This Week's Features

As time weilds the names of Chopin and Paderewski closer, it is interesting again to find two splendid examples of their art on a single record by Fritz Kreisler this week. One is a slow, eternally lovely strain from the living master—the other a curious, almost eccentric mazurka from the Pler one.

John McCormack is back in America, but whether or not you get a chance to see him, you can hear him again this week on a new double-faced record for which he sings two love songs. They are popular waltz songs, the well-known Love Sends a Little Gift of Roses, and Wonderful You, both much the same in style, ranging to the soft counter-melody of strings.

The waning year seems to favor the king of sentiment, for this week's record program includes two more of this order, by Frances Alda. Memory's Garden, is rich in color, a waltz tune, with a perpetual play of counter-melody against the voice. Its companion piece, Coming Home, is somewhat like it, and both melodies have marvelous interludes.

On the Jazz Circuit.

The sitters-out will quit their whispering and take to the floor again when they hear Paul Whiteman's new dance record, Sittin' in a Corner, this week. It is a rich, Whitesmanesque number. Maggie, in the other side introduces an orchestra new to us, Hugo Fry's Manhattan Merry-makers, who live up to their names in Maggie! (Yes, Maggie!)

Again the Manhattan Merry-makers, with an agreeable record of Love, My Heart is Calling You, a fox trot smooth as cream. On the other side Brooke Johns and His Orchestra play Nobody But You in a way to show they mean it.

Paul Whiteman's men in Little Butterfly achieve a fine example of modern dance scoring. So This is Love, by the Troubadours on the other side is a real waltz with plenty of string.

New "Spirituals" by
Bethel Jubilee Quartet

One of the wonders of music is the power of the American negro to "raise a spiritual," or extemporize a hymn on the inspiration of the moment. We have heard fine records of such spirituals as Bea, Jordan, Zola, Nobody Knows the Trouble I've Seen, and other favorites, and were interested to find two new ones among this week's records. Just, Somebody's Calling My Name by Bethel Jubilee Quartet under the direction of the Rev. T. H. Wiseman is a really thrilling example of such composition, with another on the other side, You Must Come in at the Door.

Miss Patricia and the Virginians go together as naturally as waffles with honey. Their latest record, Struttin' Jim, is subjectively reminiscent of their Lovin' Sam, and the hero is another such here celebrated in much the same manner. On the other side Billy Murray bops up with Nobody Else Can Love Me Like My Old Tomato Can, a study in mistaken identity.

Sacred Songs by Mardones

Reminiscent of resounding choir and naves are two splendid solos in Latin on a record this week by the famous Spanish bass, José Mardones. The Confutatio maledicta from Verdi's Requiem, composed after the death of his friend, Manzoni, is a magnificent outpouring. Rossini's Pro peccatis from Stabat Mater is one of the greatest melodies he ever wrote, and Mardones does it justice.

If you entertain doubts as to whether the accordion is a musical instrument in fact, hear Pietro's two records this week. To be sure, Pietro is a most elaborate instrument, and his latest records, Joyce's well-known Piston of Salome waltz, and Rife's Kiss of Spring waltz reveal the almost orchestral beauty of his playing.

What They
Bargained for

"Yes, she's back again, with her husband gone and half her fortune gone, and a little sense in her head at last, I reckon."

"Poor woman, she sure has learned something."

"I should say so. She was a fool to think he wasn't after her money. A man half her age, too."

"Well, we live and learn. She's quite pretty about it all."

"Oh, quite."

The conversation had reference to Adeline Graham, spinster, aged forty-six, with a fortune in her own right. She had married a foreigner, aged twenty-seven, after a brief and ardent wooing. They had gone to his ancestral home in Europe, which, of course, turned out to be a sham, and Adeline had paid him half her fortune to keep away from her for ever. In her own home, Adeline sat musing. She was musing over the events of those three hectic months. And she was not nearly so disillusioned as people supposed.

Why does, how can any woman of forty-eight suppose that a man of about half her age has fallen desperately in love with her? Has it ever occurred to the innocent bystander that the woman, unless she is a fool, is not nearly so disillusioned as is generally thought? Let us listen to these conversations.

First, Adeline to her chum, Amy Sturt:

"My dear, I know you think I'm a fool to marry him. But he says he loves me, and the others who have paid me that compliment have all been just as desperate after my money. Why shouldn't I give it a trial?"

"You're so happy now, Adeline, and he'll make you miserable. A foreigner, too."

"I don't see why you should grudge me a little happiness."

"Oh, well, if you put it that way, Adeline—"

Second: Adeline and her suitor:

"Ever since the moment when I set eyes on you first you have been the star of my heart, the light of my ways. I adore you, Adeline. If you won't marry me I shall blow my brains out."

"Do you really care as much as that?"

"I can't live without you."

"Then I will," Adeline was really moved. But underneath something was watching in an amused sort of way. It knew all right.

Third conversation, two months later:

"So this cottage is the ancestral castle?"

"Well, what about it?"

"You seem to have exaggerated things a good deal, that's all. They had come to address each other sarcastically by now."

"You got your bargain—a husband."

"And you got yours—money."

He glared at her. "If you're tired of it I'm quite willing to make arrangements."

"What do you mean by that?"

"Give me enough to live on and I won't trouble you any more. I did care for you in a way, but you can't expect a man to love an old woman of fifty forever. Besides, you'll be sixty soon."

Adeline laughed a bitter little laugh. "That's the best side of your nature that I've seen as yet," she said.

"How's that?"

"Why, I like you better when you're frank than as a creeping hypocrite. But I don't like you anyway—much. Suppose I give you half my capital—will you agree to a permanent separation?"

He was frightened, he was so eager. He was a little touched, too. "I'll agree to that, of course, but—"

"Oh, it's worth it. I got my bargain."

Two months later Adeline was back in America with her maiden name and her diminished fortune. And her chum, Amy Sturt, was sitting with her in her house. Amy didn't say "I told you so." She was a real chum.

"My dear—"

"Oh, don't pity me, Amy. I'm very glad I went through it all."

"That awful man?"

"I don't know about that, Amy. He wanted my money, but so did the others. And I saw through him all the time, and I knew how it would end. But, you see, I was forty-six, and I wanted the experience of life before I got to be an old woman. Each of us got what he bargained for, and thank heaven, I could afford to pay for my amusement."

Magic Moccasins

When Hiawatha strapped on his magic moccasins he could measure a mile at a single stride. But, at best, he traveled at a snail's pace compared to the speed you can make today.

Glance through your paper and in a few moments you have covered the earth. You jump from New York to San Francisco, Pittsburgh to London, Toledo to Timbuktú. You know what is going on the world over almost as soon as the events occur.

Turn to the advertising columns and you are transported to the grocer's, the clothier's, the music store; you visit the factory of a manufacturer, or talk with the inventor of a new household appliance.

Right in your own armchair, unhurried, unworried and without effort, you can make your choice of good merchandise, check up values and compare prices.

Merchants and manufacturers who put advertisements in this paper must give good value. They know that advertising, by increasing the number of their sales, will enable them to lower prices and give you more for your money—and at the same time increase their own income.

RESPECT FOR LAW IS URGED ON ROTARIANS

Judge Birdzell of the Supreme Court Addresses Members of Organization

REFERS TO OBLIGATIONS

Respect for the law, proof that a democracy has learned the art of perpetuating itself and dangers that lurk in organized minorities, were given as outstanding matters for consideration during Armistice week by Judge L. E. Birdzell before the Rotarians at their regular weekly luncheon at the McKensie hotel.

Rotarians stood for a minute in silent tribute to the heroes who fell in battle that democracy might prevail.

Judge Birdzell drew some timely lessons from the World War. Beside showing that individual liberty was one of the most sacred principles to be protected, he declared the war imposed great obligations upon Americans and many new problems as between nations and states and their national governments had come as an aftermath. Obedience to all laws whether of constitution or of statute he declared most important if democracy were to survive.

Appropriate songs were sung during the luncheon. Dr. V. J. LaRose of the November program committee presided.

Attendance was reported as being more than 91 percent strong. It is hoped at the next meeting to establish a record of 100 percent when Gov. Nestos is the speaker of the day.

E. A. Phillips, vice-president of the Minnesota Mutual Life Insurance company of St. Paul and a former president of the St. Paul Rotary Club was a guest of honor. He told of conference plans of his club and promised cooperation with Bismarck in putting over the 1924 conference in a big way. Roy Baird of Dickinson and W. R. Thatcher of Mandan were other guests.

L. S. Craswell spoke of MacLeod's work among the boys especially the interest that had been developed in football. Fifty match games had been played and 161 boys have participated in the sport.

Burt Finney gave the birthday message for Dr. Harry Brandes; L. K. Thompson for Fred Copelin and Henry Murphy for George Will. Suitable gifts were presented in each instance.

DAIRY MOVES INTO NEW HOME

Bismarck Dairy Company Shows Fine Equipment at Its Opening Today

The Bismarck Dairy Company has moved into its new home in the Hughes Block at 208 Broadway, holding their formal opening today when the place was crowded with visitors.

And with its removal into its new location, a building with a 40-foot front of glass, a fine glass-encased showcase stocked with candy in the front part with a modern business office on one side, an entire new line of expensive machinery has been installed. The new machinery which now makes it possible to handle the milk from the time it comes to the dairy and is pumped into pasteurizers, then into the filter, and runs over the automatic cooler until it is bottled and capped by an automatic contact with human hands.

Sanitation is the keynote considered in selection of the many new machines and arrangements in the building which has the newest system of refrigeration and equipment.

Three pasteurizers run by separate motors, a new viscolizer or cream machine, a filtering machine replacing the clarifier, to purify the milk are among the valuable machines installed. One of the most interesting processes used in the establishment is the tubular cooler which brings milk from 145 degrees in temperature to 45 degrees in less than a minute.

The automatic bottling machine allows for 300 gallons of milk to be bottled in an hour; 1,200 quarts, or 2,000 pints in the same length of time.

The automatic bottle washing machine installed is the only one of its kind between the Twin Cities and Bismarck, it is said. By means of this almost human machine, bottles are washed by the case, steam and water being forced up through small holes in the pipes along the tray-like shelf over which the cases pass and washed in a temperature of 135 degrees. Then they are drained, rinsed with steam and water at a temperature of 190 degrees and finally steamed again as a last purification measure before being lifted from the machine, placed in the cooler, and finally taken to the automatic bottler where they are automatically filled and sealed without coming into contact with the human hand, until ready for delivery at the home of residents of the city.

A fine glass-encased showcase in the front office has been stocked with candies, and a modern business office is just off here.

J. P. Spies recently made a trip to the Twin Cities where he spent some time in studying the latest machinery used in the large dairies there before selecting equipment for the Bismarck Dairy Company.

ALLIES FAIL TO ACT UPON CROWN PRINCE

Council of Ambassadors Holds Meeting Without Discussing the Point

FRANCE IS ANXIOUS

Paris, Nov. 14.—(By the Associated Press.)—The allied council of ambassadors failed to consider at its meeting today the question of what action should be taken in connection with the return of the former Crown Prince to Germany and as to Germany's attitude regarding the resumption of allied military control. The session was devoted to routine work and it is understood the ambassadors avoided mentioning these two questions because the allies were not in accord as to the proper course of action.

Great Britain, which took the initiative in the sending of a coercive note to Germany regarding the return of Frederick William is now said to be desirous of dropping the whole matter while France, at first indifferent, but now favoring action of some sort, is ready for such action.

AGAINST RETURN

San Francisco, Nov. 14.—A resolution calling on the United States government to head a movement of the nation to prevent the return to power of William Hohenzoller and his family in Germany was adopted by more than 1,000 Baptist laymen and ministers of California, attending a Bible and Missionary conference here.

LIGNITE MEN MEET TONIGHT

Discuss Plans For Fighting Boost in Freight Rates

Members of the North Dakota Lignite Coal Operators association are gathering in Bismarck today for the meeting tonight at which the operators of the state will formulate an aggressive campaign against the proposed new lignite freight tariff. The tariff, which was to become effective Dec. 6, has been suspended four months by the state railroad commission and the Interstate Commerce Commission, pending hearings. The operators intend to have their interests properly protected at these hearings, it is announced. The meeting this evening will be held in Room 305, McKensie Hotel at 8 p. m. James S. Millor, of Minot, secretary of the operators association, arrived in Bismarck this morning from Minneapolis. He spoke on the lignite industry of North Dakota over WLAC last evening, making special mention of the proposed increase in freight rates sought by the roads, which he declared was a "high handed attempt to throttle one of North Dakota's most important industrial activities." He appealed to the people of North and South Dakota and Minnesota to join the operators in their fight against the new tariff.

The Burnsides or "good government" ticket of the Republican party carried in one of the precincts in Sioux Falls. The other seven went to the "anti-machine" ticket. Reports from every precinct in the city and from towns throughout the county show that comparatively few votes were cast.

YOUTH DROWNS AFTER FALLING FROM PACKET

Carried Under By Swift Current at Wharf of Boat Company

Selvin Kettleson, about 20 years old, was drowned about 6:30 o'clock this morning in the Missouri river here when he fell off a boat of the Benton Packet Company. Efforts made to save him failed. The body had not been recovered at noon. Kettleson had called another man employed by the company and himself had gone out on the boat. No one saw the accident, but another employee heard his cry for help. It is presumed he fell off the boat and being unable to swim, was carried down and away swiftly by the current. He was seen to partially reappear and an effort was made to reach him with a line, but he made no effort to grab it and was quickly carried out of reach. He had been employed by the company only a comparatively short time, and had been at Washburn with the boat, which has been hauling grain gratis.

Sheriff Phelps helped to drag the river this morning in an effort to locate the body, but failed. Kettleson came here from Minn. esota.
